Points of Interest About Cape Ann

Stage Fort Park at westerly entrance of city. Site of settlement of Massachusetts Bay Colony, 1623-24. Tablet in commemoration of that fact placed on face of large boulder. Conant, Half Moon and Stone beaches.

Rafe's Chasm and Norman's Woe. Scene of "Wreck of the Hesperus." At Magnolia, Hesperus avenue. Fissure in solid rock cliff is 60 feet deep and 12 feet wide.

Mother Ann profile in Stone discovered in 1892 by Capt. William Thompson of Salem at tip end of Eastern Point. Dog Bar breakwater extends from a half mile long, completed in 1904 and extends from this point. On Eastern Point are many of the show residences of the North Shore. "The Ramparts" occupies site of Fort Independence. Fine residence of Col. John W. Prentiss now in process of completion.

Ten Pound Island in outer harbor; government fish hatchery thereon. Used as sheep pasture in early days. Five Pound Island in inner harbor; both so named for amounts in colonial money originally sold for.

Thompson's mountain, or Mt. Anne, West Gloucester, highest elevation on the cape, 255 feet above sea level. Fine view ranging from Mt. Agamenticus on Maine coast to Wachusett Mountain, Bunker Hill Monument to Boston Bay. Tract given over as reservation in memory of Lawrence Minot: thickly wooded, favorite picnic resort; reached from New Way Lane. Nearby is Haskell's pond, from which city's water is secured..

Ravenwood Park, natural forest area extending from Fresh Water Cove to West Gloucester. Reached from Fresh Water Cove or the so-called Old Salem road, Western avenue. Mason Walton's cabin, "Hermit of Bond's Hill," on this road. Well worth frequenting.

Beacon or Governor's Hill, near center of city, from Washington street. Small reservation at top from which a fine view may be obtained.

THE PLAYHOUSE ON THE MOORS

By A. H. M.

The management of the Playhouse-on-the-Moors has taken an important step this year in deciding to devote its revenues to its own ends instead of giving them, as hertofore, partly to charity. The professional excellence of its plays amply justifies this departure, if the ensuing greater generosity and largeness in mounting and appointments are not in themselves sufficient justification.

The director of the Playhouse, Miss Florence Cunningham, spent last winter in Paris, working under Jacques Copeau at the Theatre du Vieux Colombier. Under the inspiration of this experience she will produce for the first bill, July 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna" and Moliere's "The Doctor in Spite of Himself." The "Doctor" will be played in the ancient manner on a rude platform of rough boards. The interest will be focussed on the action. The lust of the eye must content itself with costume, for there will be no paper forest or clever perspective. For the second bill, August 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, "Twelfth Night" will be given. In its production that burden of the stage the Shakesperian Tradition, will be deservedly dumped. It will be played with that careless sparkling ease that so delighted Copeau's New York audiences several years ago. Again the one scene will be of the simplest and gayest possible. Without encumbrances, the play will be run off swiftly in a gently farcical fashion. It is planned to give also a special matinee at reduced rates for high school pupils and teachers, altho this means playing at a considerable loss.

The management has secured for its scenery designer, Mr. Reginald Lawrence, a recent graduate of Princeton, who has there organized and for two years directed an intensely living, intimate theatre. His methods of artistic expression have of necessity been simple, since he worked entirely without money. The eager audiences who gathered at his theatre every Saturday night came by invitation only.

Between the plays there will be art exhibitions, the main one coming August 3 to 21, inclusive. As always, they will be free to the public.

The Community Dramatic School also expects to expand this season under Miss Cunningham's direction. Mrs. Florence Evans, whose public speaking classes were so justly popular last year, will again be on the staff. Miss Gertrude Fogler of Boston will teach voice and Madame Cecile Talma will continue her French classes. On Saturday evenings it is planned to give playlets and charades at the school under the guidance of an assistant director of the 47 Workshop at Harvard. The head of the New York Dalcroze school has been engaged for that department.

Of special interest is the announcement that a number of prominent stage people have been engaged to speak at the school. Mrs. Wheilan, Belasco's costume designer, Miss Helen Wright of the Library of Congress, and Mr. Harry Warner have already consented to come. Most promising of all, Mrs. Louise Closser Hale, whose almost perfect acting as Grandma Bett in "Miss Lulu Bett' won such deserved attention last winter, will talk on what she considers the crying need of the stage today—"Diction, Diction, Diction." The prospect for the whole enterprise seems very promising.

OLD GLOUCESTER ROMANCES

By J. R. P.

(Copyright. All rights reserved.)

Foreword—The early and later history of Cape Ann abounds in many romantic, heroic, and adventurous tales well worth preserving, many of which have not appeared in print.

It is the design of the writer to present some of these in the belief that they will interest the readers of "The Shore."

No. I

Romance flourishes in all ages and under all conditions. The early settlers of Cape Ann were faced with problems which left little time for day dreams. Theirs was a hard, practical bread and butter existence. Nevertheless, the old records disclose a number of episodes which demonstrate that Dan Cupid under all climes and conditions lies in wait with his bow and arrow for targets for his friendly darts.

In the early days of the settlement on Cape Ann there came to Fisherman's field, now Stage Fort park, a young and stalwart fisherman, Geoffrey or Jeffrey Parsons, who had left England four years before in search of adventure. He settled in Gloucester in 1635. He chose a beautiful spot for his dwelling on the upland near the field. This homestead, where scores of Parsons have lived and died, was demolished some thirty-five years ago.

About two miles down toward the "head of the harbor," now the site of the Gorton-Pew main plant, was the home of William Vincent, or Vinson, as the name was commonly

MEMORIES

By Natalie Hays Hammond

The wind murmurs through the iris leaves,
The Fountain splashes on marble dials,
A peacock flaunts its jeweled tail against an amber sunset.
And the green-jade Buddha, in the Temple, glowers at Dusk.

Some day, I shall think of this,
as I unpack my souvenirs—
A cheap wood tray, gawdily painted and carved,
A grinning doll, wrapped in odd pieces of thin silk...
For these, shall carry me back to the gray-shadowed Garden,
Where the Buddha sat,—in Japan.

REPARATIONS---TO OUR DISABLED

By OLGA LINGARD

We are smug, once more— but wasn't there a time
When Hell hissed across the waters,
And these Disabled
Flung their straight young bodies
To the fangs of war for our protection?
They went at call—or sooner—
And now, for two years they've been "home again,"
Shattered and maimed, and so neglected
This might well be a prison camp, instead of home—
A land (if right were might) more theirs than ours:
Theirs, who have paid for it a lifelong price.

God of our Founding Fathers!
How can we face these boys
With arms full of rotting red tape
Instead of healing care and service?
'Service?' They know the meaning of that word—not we—
We, who feast pugilists and let our heroes starve
Among the jeering echoes of our war-time cheers.

If what foe owes to foe is "Reparation,"
And all agree that Germany be forced
To pay, in long grim years of drudgery,
Her utmost to restore disabled France—
What do we owe to our mangled flesh and blood?
What shall we call our debt to these?
What force will make us pay?

And if the money Congress doled is not enough
Why not a Wounded Veterans' Bond?
(We should have financed further Liberty's
Had cripples such as these
Not given us the gold
Of their ungrudging youth.)
If ever "patriotism" meant anything
Beyond tin horns, and bunting, and perspiring speeches,
Now is the time to prove its vital meaning
By keeping some parade-time promises
To our Disabled.

NORTH SHORE ACTIVITIES

Polo at Princemere, Whippet Racing, Tennis, Garden Fetes Scheduled This Afternoon

The hottest polo contest of the season is scheduled at Princemere field on the Wenham road at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon, when two teams of Myopia Hunt club players will engage in the final match for the Wenham trophies. The rival teams—Reds and Blues—have a club handicap of 20 goals apiece, hence the match will be played on the flat.

Inclement weather and the holidays delayed this contest in the Wenham series, but today's game brings together the logical finalists. Early last week the Reds won by 10 to 8, after allowing a team captained by Frederick Ayer a handicap of four goals. On Wednesday at Myopia the Blues triumphed over a white quartet that included J. H. Proctor, A. Mason, D. H. Hostetter, Jr., and E. H. Pentacost. The Reds started with a nine-goal deficit, but by constant hammering brought the score to 13 to 11, scoring 12 goals while the Whites registered two.

Besides determining the winners of the trophies, today's encounter will give the Myopia polo committee further data to determine club handicaps. Length of stroke, ability to co-operate through teamwork and alert horsemanship all will figure in the match, and the players will be on their mettle. On paper the contest appears to be a tossup, with the Blues perhaps having an edge in direction and the Reds in aggressiveness.

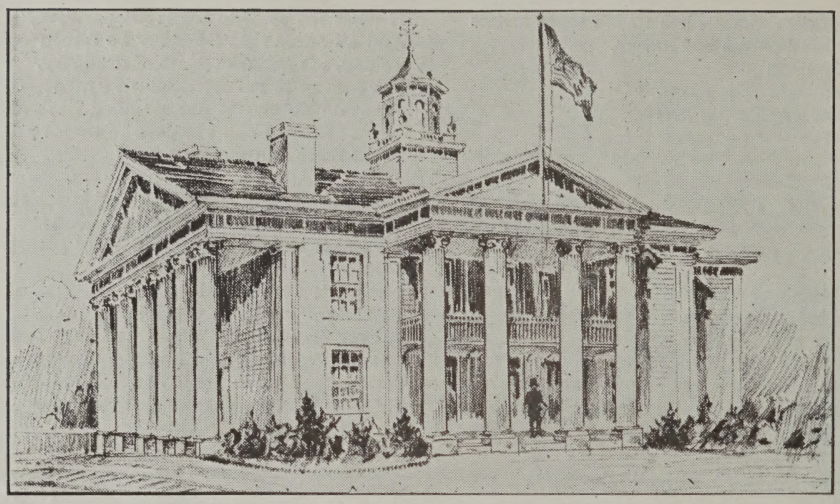
SIAMESE EMBASSY AT BASS ROCKS

The Siamese minister to America and suite will spend the season at the Thorwald, Bass Rocks. There is a new minister this year as the custom is to change every two years. Prabha Karawougse, the last minister, was a wealthy Siamese prince who came to Bass Rocks and remained in the embassy for four years.

IMPRESSIVE LEGION MEMORIAL DEDICATION



NEW HOME OF CAPT. WASS A. L. POST, TOWN HALL SQUARE

Last Sunday evening the dedication of the cenotaph, which is to form the base of the Joan of Arc statue, fittingly commemorated the lives of the heroes who have passed on, in defending the cause of humanity. The friends and distinguished guests humbly placing their wreaths at the foot of the monument, the flaming braziers, and the blue mist of the fragrant incense, all combined to make the ceremony profoundly impressive to the thousands of spectators who had come to witness this unique dedication.

Owing to labor conditions, the magnificent statue of Joan of Arc which will be placed on this pedestal, was not delivered as planned. But later on in the summer, possibly on Labor or Armistice Day, depending on the date of its delivery, which will be announced at some future time, the statue will be ready for an appropriate dedication.

It is a matter of local pride that the creator of this perfect conception of an herioc character may be claimed as a Gloucester girl. Although born in Cambridge, she came to Annisquam as a child. Her father, the late Professor Alpheus Hyatt, of Harvard, was one of the foremost biologists of his time.

At their Colonial seashore home, "Seven Acres," Miss Hyatt has untiringly pursued her studies. She has received instruction from the greatest sculptors of the world, Rodin and others, in this country and abroad.

MISS ANNA VAUGHN HYATT

Miss Hyatt's progress to the hall of fame in her profession has been steady and today she occupies the same position in the world of sculpture that Rosa Bonheur holds in the realm of painting.

A duplicate of the statue of Joan of Arc, which has thus early become a classic, is soon to be dedicated at Blois, France, where it will be placed conspicuously in a square. Miss Hyatt will attend the ceremonies pertaining to this important event by special invitation of the French government, which on the completion of this masterpiece awarded her its highest decoration, the Medal of the Legion of Honor. In the middle of June, Miss Hyatt sailed to France to be present for the occasion, but she is expected back in due season to participate in the dedication of the Joan of Arc monument here. It is given to no other artist to achieve the distinction of having a replica on both sides of the Atlantic of such a masterpiece.

It may be of interest to note that among the 200 Legionaires whom the French government has invited to be present at the dedication in Blois, will be Col. A. Piatt Andrews, the commander of the Legion Post of this city, who conceived thet idea of the beautiful memorial building and the majestic statue that will occupy the adjoining square.

Thus it has come to pass that in the New World metropolis, the ancient city of Blois. and our own seabrowned, fishing city the similitude of the martyred Joan will stand forth in imperishable bronze, a stimulus to the patriotism of future generations.

The memorial building itself, is an ornament to the city. Summer residents contributed liberally to its acquisition and fittings, and the Post cordially invites their inspection. Miss Cecilia Beaux has contributed a large panel of a Winged Victory. Mr. Eben F. Comins, the artist, an oil in life size of Capt. Wass for whom the Post was named; Col. A. Piatt, the commander has furnished a frieze brought from France, besides other like contributions. The building is well worthy of inspection.

EASTERN POINT

THE picturesque Eastern Point golf links will be discontinued, the land having been purchased for building sites. Lovers of the ancient sport hereabouts will regret this as it furnished a convenient ground for the game immediately adjacent to the Eastern Point summer colony.

The handsome summer home of Col. John H. Prentiss, commenced last fall, is still in process of construction. When completed it will be one of the finest seashore residences along the New England coast. The site is a rare one in the famed Brace Cove area. In the meantime, Col. Prentiss and family are occupying the residence of Dr. James H. Knowles.

The social life and golf will center at the Bass Rocks club. The regular Saturday night dances will be resumed the first being held last Saturday night, a good number of the colony being present. The Jefferson Johnson Jazz artists—suggestive name—will again furnish music.

BASS ROCKS

Neither commercial depression or other causes have the slightest effect on the Bass Rock-Eastern Point colony. Practically all the desirable cottages were taken early. Some land sales are said to be on the tapis and with easier building conditions, the locality is in for a building boom. The Fourth saw all the cottages opened and the season in full swing. The Moorland, Edward D. Parsons, proprietor, maintains its popularity and July Fourth saw a full house which will continue to over Labor Day. For several seasons the guests of the hotel have given some of the most pleasing theatrical events and plans are underway for a repetition of these affairs in midsummer.

A Ladies' committee has charge of the general social activities at the Bass Rocks club this season, comprising Miss Amelia Jarvie, president; Mrs. Francis Brewer, treasurer; and Miss Harriet Ellis, secretary. The entertainment committee for the season comprises Mrs. Arthur Mitton, president; Mrs. Laurence A. Brown, Mrs. Samuel Pillsbury, Misses Harriet and Kate Ellis, Mrs. Joseph O. Procter, Jr., and Mrs. Max Talbot.

Mrs. Abby L. Pope of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, is occupying the cottage on Briar road, which she leased last year.

R. M. Pogue and family are again occupying a cottage on Beach road.

James A. Baker and family of Texas have taken occupancy of one of the W. Jay Little cottages, which they purchased in June.

ANNISQUAM

AS has been the case for several years past since the discontinuance of activities at the Gloucester yacht club, yachting on Cape Ann will center here. The usual schedule will be sailed and the game will be enlivened this season by the introduction of some 20 of the "Fish" class designed by Mr. Harry L. Friend. The usual Saturday afternoon teas at the clubhouse, followed by dances in the evening being continued. It is these features which contribute much toward the growing popularity of Squam and materially advances its interest.

An addition of note is the fine residence fronting the river erected and nearly completed for Mr. Quincy Bent of Bethlehem, the reported cost of which is set at $150,000. The Bent's father and sons, have been coming to Squam for nearly a half century, and have done much for the place. It was the late Major Bent, a well wisher of Squam, who put the yacht club on its feet, and saw it over its swaddling clothes period to a firm foundation on its own footing.

It is with deep regret that we pen the passing, during the winter, at his residence in Newton, of Mr. George Frederick Simpson, who made his summer home in Lane road here for years. A veteran of the Civil war, a business man who laid the foundation of success on the highest grounds of fair dealing, a man who appreciated the best in art and literature, thoughtful and considerate of others, he was a splendid specimen of the New England type.

THE season opened here encouragingly, the greater part of the cottages being taken early. The North Shore swimming pool, at which the social activities will center, with the usual entertainments, was opened in June.

The Oceanside, W. S. Warren, Jr., manager, opened June 15, nearly all of the permanent registrants of recent years returning for the season. The usual line of social diversions has been planned, the orchestra concerts and the dancing parties in the casino featuring.

The John Hays Hammonds will not be at their residence, Lookout Hill, Freshwater cove, this season. Their home is being extensively reconstructed and although work was commenced last fall, it will not be completed for several months. The exterior will be of stucco. The Foster house in the cove, purchased last year by Mr. Hammond, as an addition to his holdings here, has been extensively remodelled and will be used as an overflow for guests.

The Hammonds intended to travel in Europe this season, but have decided to tour the Far East instead, from Baltimore by way of the Isthmus for San Francisco, and from that port to Japan where they will make their first stop. The party includes Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, Miss Natalie Hammond and Richard P. Hammond. Miss Elizabeth Hammond went overland to San Francisco to see them off, but will not accompany them.

The Foster residence will be occupied this season by Mrs. Hoyle, sister of Mrs. Hammond, and Miss Mary Hoyle of St. Louis.

John Hays Hammond, Jr., the inventor, is busily engaged at his laboratory, Freshwater cove, in work covering radio control of devices for the propulsion of torpedoes and warships from air planes and from the shore. Great strides have been made along this line which promises to materially affect future warfare. Mr. Hammond's diversion is the music of the pipe organ of which he is a lover. During the spring he has installed an organ containing devices of his own invention and in order to secure room for the instrument, a substantial addition was made to his bungalow, materially altering its appearance and giving the exterior the appearance of a small chapel.

Mrs. William R. Nelson of Kansas City, and daughter, have arrived for the season at their summer residence, Shore road. The grounds surrounding this estate are among the most beautiful in this locality.

Miss Velma M. Morse, of Cambridge, has opened "Highfields" in Norman avenue for the season.

Mrs. William McFadon and Mrs. Pierrepont Dutcher, of Quincy, Ill., who have been touring in Japan, will arrive this month and take occupancy of their cottage, corner of Hesperus and Lexington avenues.

Mrs. W. Langley Morrison, at present in Europe, will arrive later at her home in Lexington avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Manahan of Brookline are occupying the Ballou cottage, Ocean street.

Miss Georgina Lowell, of Boston, is occupying her Shore road summer home.

Harlow Halliday and family of New York are in Apple Tree cottage, which they have made their summer home for several seasons past.

Mrs. Claude Kilpatrick of St. Louis come to "Stonehurst" on Shore road in June.

Arthur W. Kennard and family of Boston are occupying the Hoyle cottage.

Mrs. J. Theodore Heard and Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Heard of Boston, are established for the season at their summer home, Norman's Woe road.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Hall, of Salem, have returned to their Summer street cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Farr, of New York, are established for the season in the Peterson cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Farnum, of Chicago, are again occupying "Sun Dial" cottage.

Old comers to Magnolia are the Rev. Dr. Charles Wadsworth and family of Philadelphia. Their cottage is in Oakes field.

"Sunnyside" cottage on Norman avenue will this season be occupied by Miss E. C. McVickar of Providence.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Smith, of Germantown, Penn., are again occupying the Young cottage, Lexington avenue.

Mrs. William N. Sheriff of Chicago, who was absent from the colony last season, has taken the James S. Lee house, Shore road.

Mrs. William H. Scudder of St. Louis has the Knowles cottage, Magnolia avenue.

Henry D. Schmidt and family, of Boston, as for several years past, are occupying the Butler cottage, Magnolia avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Prescott Rowe, of Brookline, are returning for another season to their Norman avenue cottage.

Mrs. Edward B. Richardson, of Brookline, has opened her Norman avenue home for the season.

Lt. Col. and Mrs. Edward B. Richardson and family, of Brookline, came in June to their Norman avenue house. Mrs. J. E. Pillsbury is with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lincoln Pierce, of Boston, have the Wentworth house, Hesperus avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Foster, of Hartford, are again in their Norman cottage, Norman's Woe road.

Edward S. Foster and family, of Winchester, have arrived for the season at their Shore road cottage.

Dr. Mary D. Dakin and daughters, Marion and Marjorie, came in June to "Afterglow" cottage, Fuller street.

The family of Jacob D. Cox, of Cleveland, are again occupying the Morrill cottage, Hesperus avenue.

Miss Fannie Faulkner, of Boston, has opened her Shore road cottage for the season.

Signor and Mrs. Gustavo di Rosa, of Boston, the latter nee Maud Cupples, are again at the Knowles cottage for the season.

Mrs. Matthew Semple of Philadelphia, is again occupying the Ford cottage, Fuller street.

Mrs. William H. Chaplin of Sewickley, arrived at the Curry house the latter part of June for the season.

The Alexander C. Brown's of Cleveland, have the Covel cottage, Lexington avenue, this season.

Mrs. S. Fisher Corlies, of Boston, has opened "Att-Lea" house for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Coolidge, Jr., of Boston, arrived early in June at their summer cottage, Blynmsn farm.

Mr. and Mrs. William Baxter Closson are again in the Newton cottage, Shore road.

The Ayer's cottage, Lexington avenue, is again occupied by Rev. G. C. F. Bratenohl and family of Washington.

Miss Caroline H. Bovey of Minneapolis has arrived at Island View cottage for the season.

Miss Helen O. Bigelow of Boston came to her Hesperus avenue cottage in June.

Mrs. R. E. Tyson of New York has the Wilkinson bungalow, Western avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. John Allyn of Boston are again in their Magnolia avenue home.

Mrs. Russell Steinert of Boston has the Story cottage, Western avenue.

Dennis A. Upson of Washington, who last year was in the McMillan house, has taken the Underwood cottage, Shore road, for the season.

Mrs. Francis H. Williams of Boston, who was last year in "At-Lea" house, is this season domiciled in the Sampson house, Summer street.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Rueter of Boston have taken a house here for the season.

Otis Weld Richardson and family of Boston have the Wilkins cottage, Oakes field, for the season.

Newcomers to Magnolia this season are H. G. Osgood and family of Boston, who have purchased the Bennett house in Oakes avenue.

Arthur W. Tilley and family of New York are again occupying the Lycett cottage in Fuller street.

Mrs. J. Wingate Thornton of Boston has arrived at "The New House," Magnolia avenue, for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. MacArthur of New York have taken the Winslow cottage, Hesperus avenue, for another season.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Gulld of Boston have the Chick cottage, Norman avenue.

Francis Palms of Detroit and family have the Lycett cottage, Norman avenue.

Mrs. John B. Dumont of Plainfield, N. J., has leased the Houghton cottage for the season.

Porter Pollock and family of Youngstown, O., are in the Hayden cottage for the summer.

The summer season of nineteen twenty-one opened in earnest on Monday last, with the annual Fourth of July buffet luncheon at the North Shore Swimming Pool, Magnolia's popular rendezvous.

Early in the forenoon a concert was enjoyed by a large number of the members, who with their guests gathered in groups on the broad verandas of the Pool. After the luncheon, dancing by the younger members of the summer colony completed the formal opening of the club for the summer season.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. E. Prescott Rowe and Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Richardson of Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. F. K. W. Rehn, Jr., of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Stevens, Misses Edith and Josephine Stevens and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Stevens of Boston; Rev. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, Jr., of Philadelphia; Mrs. H. W. Farnum, Miss Helen Farnum of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Converse of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. John Chess Ellsworth of South Bend, Ind.; Dr. Mary D. Dakin, the Misses Dakin of Boston; Misses Helen and Priscilla Rhodes of Brookline; Miss Elizabeth Saudder of St. Louis, and Master Fred Ellsworth of South Bend, Ind.

The sudden death of Mr. Charles S. Penhallow at his Magnolia avenue residence on Monday came as a great shock to his many friends along the coast. Mr. Penhallow, whose winter residence was at 56 Elliot street, Jamaica Plains, had been coming to Magnolia for over thirty-five years and took a prominent part in the activities of the place. He is survived by Mrs. Penhallow (Jane S. Porter), Miss Helen Penhallow and by two sons.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank K. W. Rehn of New York city are occuping the "Sea Reaches," their cottage on Oaks road. Mr. Rhen's mother, Mrs. F. K. M. Rehn, will spend the season at the "Rockaway," East Gloucester. Her niece, Miss Bessie Hunting, will accompany her.

July 16 is the date set for the open meeting of the Gloucester College club, to which Magnolia college men and women are cordially invited. The meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Isaac Patch, East Gloucester. A picnic supper, the singing of college songs and an outside speaker will be some of the features of the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Frances Palms of Detroit, have taken the Lycett cottage on Norman avenue for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Palms were guests at Hotel Oceanside last year.

Miss Lysbeth Bunker, who with her parents are guests at Hotel Oceanside each season, was among those attending the festivities of Harvard commencement.

Miss Bunker, whose home is in Yonkers, N. Y., announced her engagement to Mr. Robert Flack of Troy early last winter, the engagement being the conclusion of an Oceanside romance. Their marriage is expected to occur sometimes this fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hayes and small daughter, Barbara, were guests at Magnolia over the 17th of June, making the trip from East Orange, N. J., by motor in one day. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes will be the guests of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Smith, at their Lexington avenue residence later on in the season.

W. Griffith Roberts of Spencer, Iowa, was the guest of Miss Marjorie Dakin over the Fourth of July. Mr. Roberts was a recent guest at the Harvard Engineering camp at Squam Lake, N. H.

A marriage of great interest to the summer colony was that of Miss Helen Coates of Philadelphia and Robert Stead of Washington, which occurred the early part of June. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stead were guests at Hotel Oceanside last season and Mrs. Stead has many friends at the hotel, having been a guest there for a number of years.

Congratulations are being extended to Dr. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, Jr., of Philadelphia, on the arrival of their grandson, Wadsworth Zinsser, a short time ago. The Zinsser-Wadsworth wedding, which occurred last July at Magnolia, was one of the society events of the season.

B. Lord Buckley, who with his mother, Mrs. G. L. Buckley, were for many seasons guests at Hotel Aborn, are at present en route for the Yellowstone National Park by motor. Intimate friends of the Buckleys are following their trip with interest, a recent letter from them stating that they had reached Illinois without any mishaps, and were thoroughly enjoying the country. They expect to return to New York city in September.

Mr. and Mrs. James Green of Washington were once more welcomed to Hotel Oceanside the latter part of June. The Greens have apartments in the Perkins cottage, one of the Oceanside group.

A good season is looked for at the Oceanside. Manager W. S. Warren, Jr., was on the scene early in the spring and with a large force of assistants has thoroughly prepared this hostely for the season.

Among the guests of note who arrived this week was Mrs. Marshall Field of Chicago, who has an apartment in the hotel proper. Mrs. Field was a guest of the Oceanside two years ago.

Guests of national prominence who will make Magnolia their summer home are Marvin Hughitt, chairman of the board of directors of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, and his daughter, Mrs. Hugh McCullough. Their suites are in the hotel.

MY LADY GOES SHOPPING

Plans for Peggy's Party.

"Yes, I saw Peggy and Phil in Newport," said Chubby Chelton, sadly, "and Phil is so busy these days demonstrating that he has made a mate, if not a matron, of Peggy, who persists in looking younger and more beautiful than ever, that it is fairly disheartening. They are not coming back until after the Fourth and Peggy is going to be so mad when she finds that she has missed the dedication of the Legion Memorial Hall and the Horrible Parade n'everything that the only logical thing to do is to plan a 'coming in' party for her—to take her mind off her losses."

The next step was to consult Jimmy and Aunt Lida and to send wireless appeals for ideas to all the old clan, but it was Marion, Peggy's flapper sister-in-law, just back from boarding school, who thought of an Ad. Party.

"Peggy spends her life shopping, but she grows sentimental when she speaks of the shops in Magnolia," Marion remarked, "so why not have the guests represent these beloved places come to welcome Peggy, so to speak? We'll keep it a secret and, make it an ad. stunt party," she added.

Jimmy seconded the motion, although as a rule he feels it his duty to disagree with "the Child," with whom he carries on a chronic quarrel. They are quite like brother and sister.

"The first thing to do is to get the clan together," said Jimmy, "then we'll give the shops the once over and decide on 'Who's Where and When and Why'."

Jimmy always quotes The Cape Ann Shore, as he feels that it adds a literary flavor to his conversation.

We telephone to Mollie to meet us at Manahan's, and started off, all aglow.

Mollie not only met us, but she contributed Phyllis Brownell, her cousin, the artist, who is stopping with her for the summer, and who had never been shopping in Magnolia before.

"It is a pocket edition de luxe of Fifth Avenue a la Champetre! Why, Lexington avenue looks like the setting for a play! And things are so reasonable, too," she exclaimed.

We explained our mission, and Phyllis was as enthusiastic as only an artist can be.

Farr's was our first port of call. Mr. Farr introduced us personally to the new Farcraft sweater—a stunning model, woven in silk or wool, in an original Farr design that one would need not be afraid of seeing duplicated. Phyllis insisted on buying one, though we warned her that Mr. Farr had so many good things up his sleeve that it was reckless to fall for the first one she saw.

Aunt Lida, meanwhile, was trying on a polo coat of silver gray Angora brush wool, in which she looked like a fairy god-mother.

Marion was deep in the intricacies of a fascinating sleeveless golf suit with knickers, and a cape that could be worn as a skirt if one's stern parents demanded a conventional garb on return from the links.

Mollie was trying to decide between having an English doeskin skirt made to order—Farr has his own tailors on the spot—or buying all the hats in sight! Farr's French felts, by the way, are "the last word" in sport hats.

Jimmy decided that we had all the local color that was necessary to feature Farr at the coming party, and he firmly collected us.

"Do you know," said Phyllis, eagerly, "that Mr. Farr told me things of the Faird Isle sweaters that I had never known before? You know, he started that vogue."

"Where are the blooming isles?" asked Chubby, who was fast becoming reconciled to Peggy's marriage, and was trying to impress Phyllis by attempting intelligence.

"They are the smallest of the Shetland group, North of Scotland," said Jimmy, who had basely listened in.

"Yes," continued Phyllis, "and Mr. Farr said that the inhabitants were originally provided by a shipwrecked schooner. The men fished and the women knitted. Those designs that we see are really symbols that tell the history of their island!"

"Agreed, if you'll walk into McCutcheon's with us," remarked Jimmy, heading for the door. "We have to go there because Aunt Lida is with us, whether in New York or Magnolia, she faithfully visits her store of beautiful linens. It is a sort of sacred rite with the old dear."

This time it was a colored luncheon set for Peggy, who has dozens, but none quite like this—a tan linen, embroidered in brown, that suggests coffee with rich cream.

"I am so glad," said Phyllis, "that color is returning to its own. McCutcheon's provides color from bath mats to match any tiles to bedspreads that will harmonize with any temperament."

Aunt Lida, belonging to the pure past, gently murmured that "White was the most satisfactory household color," especially now that the war was over, and McCutcheon's were presenting all the imported linens at ante bellum prices. And when Phyllis lost her heart to Spanish bedding—heavy old linen sheets with hand embroidered hems—Aunt Lida kept on petting the "plain kind." It takes all kinds of sheets to make up the beds of the world, and McCutcheon knows it.

"Aunt Lida can take this part at the party," said Jimmy, "that's settled."

"I refuse to wear a Spanish sheet to any function," returned Aunt Lida, nervously, "but if you children can think of something suitable, I shall dress as you suggest."

"That's a good sport," encouraged Jimmy. "And now for the 'Little White Salon by the Sea.' Chubby, old bean, don't you think that you could carry a box of geraniums on each arm and come as their representative?"

It is always gratifying to escort newcomers to Slattery's. First there is Mrs. Nuttall's charming welcome, which gives one's very entrance a social flavor, and then, as Phyllis immediately observed, "There is no other shop like it." If anyone doubts it she has but to visit the wonderful little apartments provided for the saleswomen—right behind the cool gray fitting rooms—to be convinced. The outdoor restroom where the weary shopper may inhale sea breezes until she forgets that she is not on her own piazza, also appealed to Phyllis.

In spite of the restful suggestions, three minutes later we had all forgotten our purpose in coming and were engrossed in real shopping, which Jimmy said was not playing the game —but how could we help it when we were surrounded by Slattery's "apparel and accessories"?

Even I couldn't resist their new slip-on dresses, which may be had in Roshanora and Pebble crepe as well as in Jersey and French flannel.

"They have such perfect lines," said Phyllis, the artist. "Just look at this chiffon Alpaca, as soft as silk, as light as air, and yet able to face the ocean atmosphere. And this white worsted dress recalls Russian plays to my fancy."

"Yes," said Mrs. Nuttall, "that is one of our imported French models which illustrates the Russian lines. It is all hand-knitted."

"Save the child!" interrupted Jimmy. Following his horrified gaze, we beheld Marion garbed in a figured satin breakfast gown. It was peach colored, and Marion has red-gold hair! We rescued the child with due speed. I fear that she is going to be a vamp as a debutante, but this year, thank goodness, she is only a school girl, and with Peggy's help we can hope to control her. Just imagine Peggy able to chaperone! As Marion says, "Isn't marriage wonderful?"

Aunt Lida was particularly interested in the English tweed coats—for motoring and rough wear—lined with very Scotch looking checks and plaids. Aunt Lida prides herself on her Mayflower ancestry, and the shore from which she originally sailed is advertised by her love for English tweed. However, I must admit that, without being pro-British, I yearn for one of their new tailored suits in that never-

PLANS FOR PEGGY'S PARTY

"Why this sudden modesty?" demanded Jimmy, seeking revenge.

But Mrs. Nuttall came to the rescue, "We have those from $12.50 up," said she, with a sympathetic twinkle. "Your bank account is always safe with us." So Mollie invested in four, and called it a day.

As Marion insisted that she needed new riding boots and that her father had told her to purchase them at Thayer McNeil's, we escorted her there in state Perhaps it is the bluebird cretonne on the wicker chairs that give this shop the cool and cheerful air of a self-respecting veranda.

We discovered that the same kin of riding boots that sold there fo fifty-five dollars last year are no thirty dollars! This made Mario quite reckless and she indulged in th new golf oxfords with the famous Mc Afee soles. She fell in love with th Japanese shoe trees, suggested fo bridge prizes, and all but bought ou the stock!

The strap buckles that sit on th button in a majestic manner and re mind me of Tiffany setting, hypnotize Mollie. She bought one that looke like a star sapphire set in platinum Imagine that with her gray-blu Georgette frock that Manahan's buyer brought her from Paris!

Phyllis seems to be as practical as Mollie is the opposite, and she put in the time experimenting with a polish for kid shoes, which she declared not only did the trick, but dried up immediately.

A few minutes later Chubby followed her to one of those very attractive tables on which Thayer McNeil displays color schemes and tempting footgear simultaneously, and watched her tenderly holding a wee moccasin. "Just what I have been trying to find for my baby niece," said Phyllis. Chubby was so moved by this confidence that he joined her in an animated discussion on infant footwear, and Mr. Larkin, who ably assists every customer, furnished him with a catalogue of their Plastic Shoes for children. The sight of Chubby reading this was too much for us, and we led him out to get the air.

But Chubby was determined to shine. "Didn't you say that Miss Brownell is an artist?" he inquired. "Well, then, she must go to Schmidt & Sons' next. They have things that only an artist can love."

"I want to go there," agreed Phyllis, "I noticed their advertisement in The Cape Ann Shore." At which Jimmy, of course, began to strut and take notes ostentatiously.

We were all so enthralled at the new yet ancient "specials" that Schmidt's is showing this summer. Visitors in this part of the country who are interested in the real thing, are not only given the opoprtunity to see the old Sheffield plate warmers that once kept the Duke of Cambridge's now be purchased through Mr. Schmidt.

"The bowls may be had separately," continued Phyllis, "and it is the chance of a life time, as the real old blue rock crystal is almost impossible to obtain."

Jimmy discovered that the glasses were anti-prohibition, and that the set merely cost $4000, but Phyllis declared that it was priceless. Chubby looked as thoughtful as a fat man can, and muttered that he always bought his wedding presents at Schmidt's.

"Plates," remarked Jimmy, looking at the exquisite porcelains coldly, "suggest food to me. Let's go to Del Monte's and have tea and talk over our plans."

"But," objected Marion, "you all wasted so much time that we are not half through, and what would Peggy's party be without Lamson & Hubbard's and—"

"We must feed our fancies later," interrupted Jimmy, "as the call of Del's will not be denied and requires an answering call from us."

When we were all happily settled consuming delectable—Jimmy says we should coin the word "Delmontable" to really describe it—afternoon tea, we decided to continue our shopping tour in Gloucester, and meet at Janet's Garden for a last conference before Peggy's arrival. Phyllis generously volunteered to take over the costumes and Jimmy to be the entertainment committee, so it's sure to be a success.

"I'll advertise it in The Cape Ann Shore, finished Jimmy grandly.

Season Opens Auspiciously. Friend "Fish" Boats Tried Out Successfully

Owing to rain and lack of wind the initial race of the season scheduled for Saturday was called off, the boats failing to finish within the time limit. The races of Sunday and the Fourth were sailed under fine yachting conditions and the season has opened auspiciously.

Two races were sailed Sunday, the first in the morning and the second in the afternoon. Nine of the new Friend "fish" type got away.

A light northeast wind prevailed in the morning. The course for three Annisquam Y. C. classes was a beat down the river and to Plum Cove, a reach to the inner mark in the bay and a broad reach and a run home.

There were three starters in the bird class, the Albatross getting the best of the sendaway, but later losing her lead to the Tern before passing Bar Rocks. In that order the contestants sailed each leg of the course.

The afternoon race was sailed in a southeast breeze, which strengthened as the race progressed, the same course being sailed as in the morning.

The birds got away evenly. On the run to the Spar buoy, the Auk went into the lead with the Chicadee second and the Tern third. On the run to the inner mark, the Tern passed the Chickadee and in these positions the craft finished.

In the Fish class there were 18 starters, all getting over the line without loss of time. At Bar Rock they were all huddled up. No. 23 was in the lead, with No. 9 second and No. 13 third. At Plum Cove No. 22 had worked into second place and these positions were held to the inner mark.

On the beat home, Douglass Guiler, who was trailing, split tacks with the fleet and went off to starboard, his judgment being vindicated for at the lighthouse he had pulled into first place. No. 2, which had followed his lead, coming in second.

In the cat class, Copycat pulled away going down the river and established a good lead, rounding Plum Cove mark first with the Catnip second. These positions were maintained to the inner mark.

Alden French in the Sea Mew, third boat, here split tacks, the Copycat and Catnip standing in shore, the Catspaw and Kittiwake keeping well off shore, Sea Mew taking middle ground. It proved a winning move, for at the lighthouse the Sea Mew was in the lead and maintained it to the finish, Copycat being second. The summary:

POINTS OF INTEREST

Wharves skirting the water front, interesting as affording "close-up" of fish curing, etc.

Dogtown Commons, site of deserted Revolutionary settlement. Reached from Gee avenue, Riverdale. Fine example of boulder deposits of glacial period. "Whale's Jaw," best known of these boulders, at edge of common. Rocking stone, etc.

Babson House, opposite Ellery House, erected by Col. John Low about 1785. Old slave pens in attic.

Main street, first known as Fore, afterwards as Front street. Principal business avenue. Laid out 1642. Middle street, paralleling Main, contains many old colonial houses and the Judith Sargent house, the grounds of which, originally extending to Main street, are to be restored.

On Middle street are the First Parish (Unitarian) Church, oldest in Gloucester; Independent Christian (Universalist) first Universalist society in America, church edifice erected 1805; St. John's Episcopal Church, Trinity Congregational Church and the First Baptist Church.

Sawyer Free Library and Reading Room, Middle street, adjoining Unitarian church. Interior fine specimen of colonial woodwork. Originally home of Thomas Sanders, merchant.

Old Town Hall Square, at junction of Middle and Washington streets. Beautiful American Legion Memorial building and monument, on which will be placed statue of Joan of Arc by Anna Vaughn Hyatt.

Fort Point, at western side of inner harbor, down Commercial street from Main, fortified in 1743. Now Italian quarter and rendezvous of fishermen of that nationality.

Drives around the Cape: Up Washington street, through Riverdale, past Annisquam, Bay View, Lanesville into Pigeon Cove, Rockport and completing the circuit to Gloucester. Almost a continuous ocean view, which will be completed when the Bass Rocks-Land's End stretch is completed, by next year.

Beaches: Little Good Harbor and Long Beaches, between Bass Rocks and Land's End, Rockport. Wingaersheek Beach, West Gloucester, largest on Cape, two miles long, 600 feet deep at low tide; reached from Essex avenue, West Gloucester, down Concord street.

Quarries at Bay View and Pigeon Cove, among largest in country, near main highway.

Blynman canal, first cut in 1642 by Rev. Richard Blynman, at Western entrance of city.

spelled when the family came to Gloucester in 1637.

The Vincents were people of "quality," in the old country, folk of Norman lineage. Francis Vincent married Sarah, daughter of Sir Francis Paulet, and maid of honor to Queen Anne, wife of James I.

William, their son, came to New England in 1635, and, shortly after, settled in Gloucester, where he married Rachel Varney. He appears to have been a man of substance for he built three houses near Vincent's Spring. He was one of the selectmen, and the first owner of Five Pound Island, so called because it was first sold for five pounds.

At this time the entire harbor front was thickly wooded and only the small clearings of the settlers near the water front broke the continuity of the virgin forest.

One bright summer morning, the stalwart Geoffrey moored his craft at the head of the harbor. The day was hot and Geoffrey decided to quench his thirst at Vincent's spring which was famous even in those days for its limpid coolness. It bubbled out under a boulder shaded by oaks and elms. It was a favorite place of the Indians, who pitched their camps in the locality prior to the coming of the white man. To this spot, reached by a tree shadowed path, Geoffrey threaded his way. Kneeling down he proceeded to slake his thirst, when, reflected in the shining mirror of the pool, he saw a winsome, smiling maiden bearing a drinking gourd. Looking up he found that it was no figment of fancy, but a living beautiful reality. Sarah, the youngest daughter of the house, noted the approach of the stranger, and shyly offered him hospitality in the shape of a gourd. At that minute the little winged archer, who was lurking under a fern, drew his bowstring and the arrow went true to the mark. Why prolong the tale? They were married and lived happily ever after. Numerous descendants of the romantic couple still lived in this city while others may be found in all parts of the country.

This brief tale would be incomplete without recounting the legend of Vincent's Spring. As the town grew, the main road, first called Fore or Front street, followed the winding of the shore, came into existence and became known by the commonplace but more pretentious name of Main street. It skirted Vincent's Spring at the base of what is now Union Hill. Eventually a town pump was built over Geoffrey's romantic mirror, but it continued to refresh man and beast until twenty-five years ago when the town outgrew it, and perpetuated its memory in legend. The tradition was that anyone who drank the magic waters of the spring would sail over George's fishing bank which is one of the most dreaded places on the New England coast to the fisherman. It is the spot where the highest quality of codfish are caught. There, in a single night, scores of fine fishing craft have been overtaken by gales and claimed as the ocean's toll, leaving hundreds of widows and orphans in its wake. Fortunately, modern methods of fishing have reduced almost to a minimum, these sacrifices.

The writer has often quaffed the waters of magic power and he, too, like many othters who have slaked their thirst from its depths, has sailed across the dangerous shoal, but returned to tell the tale.

But Vincent's Spring now is only a memory, revealed only by those of middle life—a recollection of old Gloucester bygones.

Mrs. Audella Hyatt and daughter, Mrs. Alfred Mayor and family, whose winter home is Princeton, N. J., arrived at "Seven Acres" in June and will remain until late in the season. Dr. Mayor, who has been engaged for several seasons in marine research work in the tropics, has recovered from an illness caused by too close application to his work. Dr. Mayor was in Honolulu last summer in conference with the leading marine scientists of the world, and took a prominent part in the proceedings. He sailed recently for the Dry Tortugas to complete a line of investigation on which he has been engaged for a number of years.

Miss Olga Lingard has returned to Highland cottage after a winter passed in Washington, where she has been engaged in work in the interest of disabled veterans of the World war. She has had as guests during the latter part of June, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Wheelwright of Boston and Miss Francis Wintringham, an artist of New York.

Prof. Barry MacNutt of Lehigh University and family of South Bethlehem, Penn., have arrived at their cottage at Hermit Ledge.

William L. Jelly and family of Salem are at their Norwood's Heights home for the season.

Bradbury Huff and family of Manchester, N. H., are at their River road cottage.

Frank H. Howes and family of Newton are among the cottage colony here for the season. Their home is in the Annisquam Heights section.

Clarence A. Hight and family of Brookline have come for the season to their cottage.

By A. H. M.

The first Saturday entertainment of the Community Dramatic school consisted of two reading by Miss Gertrude Plonk and Miss Woods. Miss Plonk in Jerome K. Jerome's "Passing of the Third Floor Back," succeeded not only in giving individual characterization but even a sense of the scene. It was a full and rounded presentation of the story as though it were a play by many actors. Miss Wood's two selections from Edgar Lee Master's "Mitch Miller" charmingly gave the impression of a boy without a hint of those nauseating tricks usual to stage boyishness. Both of the readings had a warmth and brightness of intonation, a distinction of characterization that could only have been won by hard, enthusiastic work. Informal dancing followed.

Sunday evening a delightful concert was given in the Gallery-on-the-Moors by Miss Margaret Valentine and Mr. Rudolf Bowers, formerly second concert master with the New York Symphony. Miss Valentine has a supple vigor that showed especially well in Mendelssohn "Prelude." Mr. Bowers' style is careful and full of thought. The program was unusually interesting in its generous inclusion of the work of the younger generation of composers. It follows:

Sonata for Violin and Piano..Sylvio Lazzari
Prelude .....Mendelssohn
British melody, The Wild Hills of Clare Mountain Brook .....
Cyril Scott
"Noel".....Balfour Gardiner
Variations on a theme of Corelli.....
Tartini-Kreisler
Poem.....Zdenko Fibich
Perpetuum mobile.....Franz Ries
Sonata for Violin and Piano..Edward Greig
Allegro Vivace—Allegretto—Allegro Animato

GALLERY-ON-THE-MOORS

It has been decided by the management of the Gallery-on-the-Moors to adopt this summer another plan in appointing a Jury for the Sixth Annual Exhibition.

As some uncertainty has been expressed and many queries have come to the Gallery, as to the aim and ideal striven for, it has been deemed wise to submit a brief explanation of the work in general of the past five summers, and the object to be striven for in the future.

The whole general plan of the Gallery work is primarily ART. In the cataclysm of the war, and the unavoidable downward swing of the great pendulum of world forces, from rising civilization to impending materialism, it is believed that the individual effort, however small it is, manifested in art gallaries and exhibitions, love of pictures, small theatres with high ideals, people's pageants, fused into a living current by community spirit, in these lie the great, perhaps only hope of inculcating a love of art in the younger generations, already too seriously tinged with eroticism and decadence. So it is hoped that these many and scattered individual efforts may become a great collective force with ever broadening influence and enlarged vision.

Another aim always striven for by the Gallery is freedom from graft, not necessarily financial, but of a more subtle form of the prevalent disease, favoritism or friendly preference. It has been desired that each picture should be submitted to these exhibitions solely from merit and not because of the artist's name or reputation, and to further that end, no individual or jury has ever received remuneration in money or gift.

During the first exhibitions the pictures were largely invited, as wisely as possible, but as the Gloucester Art Community increased and strengthened this became too arduous a task for individuals, who always feared some good painting might be unwittingly neglected in an unknown studio.

Last year, 1920, the exhibitors of the last three preceding summers chose by ballot their own jury and a very successful show was hung. The management welcomes this opportunity of publicly acknowledging and thanking the committee for their untiring efforts and the sacrifice of time they so loyally gave, in the all too valuable and fleeting summer months.

This year it is thought interesting to try still another experiement before any plan is definitely adopted. A committee will be appointed by the management with the idea of combining different elements and some outside interests in the art world. This

A DREAM COME TRUE—MIDSHIPMAN KNUTSFORD

By J. R. P.

(Copyright. All rights reserved.)

Foreword—The early and later history of Cape Ann abounds in many romantic, heroic, and adventurous tales well worth preserving, many of which have not appeared in print.

It is the design of the writer to present some of these to the readers of The Shore, with the belief that they will meet a receptive audience.

No. II

In one of the southern counties of England is the ancestral seat of the Knutsford family. Nearby is a little stream which is fordable at times. The family is one of the most ancient in the kingdom and owes its name to Canute, a Danish sea rover who originally owned the ford—"Canute's Ford"—modernized to Knutsford. Theirs was one of the very few of the ancient Saxon or Danish estates that escaped despoilation at the coming of the Conquerer. The family have always maintained their station. A Lord Knutsford held a major portfolio of state under Gladstone.

It is something of a coincidence that after penning these lines the writer opened a copy of the London Times of June 2, 1921,—the Derby number—and noted an item pertaining to the present Lord Knutsford, showing that the family is still carrying on.

In common with most English families, the Knutsfords have followed the sea and so it happened, in the course of time, that one of the young sons entered the royal navy as a midshipman and, about 1750, commenced a cruise to England's far flung empire, staked out in various parts of the world.

The scene shifts at this juncture to Sandy Bay in the New World—now Rockport, or to be more specific, that part known as Pigeon Cove. The inhabitants were honest, hard working fisher folk, wresting livelihood from the sea.

To one of these families a daughter was born, who, from her childhood, was a being set apart from her playmates, inasmuch as she possessed a certain dignity and reserve peculiarly her own. As she grew to womanhood her beauty became accentuated and

FROM A PRISON

By NATALIE HAYS HAMMOND

There was a man who had sinned.
The Judge sentenced him to life imprisonment.
So, he was thrown into a nasty cell, way underground.

After a few years, the gaoler noticed that the man prayed.
And because he was afraid that his prayers
Would escape through the one barred window and reach Heaven,
He came with mortar, and blocked it up.

The next day the gaoler returned, to view his work.
It was very dark, but by the light of his torch,
He saw that the prisoner was dead.

THE ESPERANTO

Story of the Fishing Schooner Which Won the International Fisherman's Cup

Back in 1710 there lived at East Gloucester a vessel builder, Abram Robinson, who was a man of progressive ideas. He believed that the type of rigging and sails of a fishing vessel could be improved and simplified and that a rig composed entirely of fore and aft sails would be far more satisfactory than the combination then used.

So he built a craft along the lines of these ideas. Came the day of launching. Of course, anything of the kind was an event in those days, more so than usual, because of the novel construction in hull and rigging.

The day, it is recorded, was fair and calm, and as the craft slid down the ways into the water, after the proverbial christening by smashing a bottle of grog across her stem, she skimmed lightly across the water of the inner harbor.

A spectator involuntarily exclaimed, "See how she scoons!" "Then a schooner let her be!" answered back her designer, and so the name, thus instantaneously coined, became a fixture, not

VIRGINIA WAINWRIGHT AND ARTISTS' CONCERT

Manchester Town Hall, July 26, 4 P. M.

IS THE SUMMER RESIDENT AN ASSET OR A LIABILITY?

Is the summer resident an asset or a liability?

Evidently there is something to be said on both sides of the subject, for while the great majority of Cape Ann would answer this question in the affirmative, there is a minority—a negligible minority, perhaps—who hold to the contrary.

But harken unto Mr. Roger W. Babson:

At the annual meeting of the Boston Chamber of Commerce held recently, Roger W. Babson spoke as follows:

"I was born and brought up in Gloucester, Massachusetts, the thriving city which you all know down on the North Shore. When I was a youngster that city had a population of about 30,000, and I remember when the first summer visitors began to come to Gloucester. There was considerable discussion between the people of the town as to whether it was an industry to encourage or discourage. The storekeepers ruled, and Gloucester gradually but constantly became a greater and greater summer resort. As a statistician I believe that Gloucester turned the peak and went downward when it decided to be a great summer resort. Today, instead of having 30,000 people, Gloucester has only about 22,000, and it is in a precarious condition.

Let us not be fooled into the idea that the future New England is to become a great summer resort; let us not be fooled into the idea that the future New England is to become "The Playground of America." When we take this position we start on the downhill road. The business, the character of the children, the birth rate, the whole of the moral fiber of a community, of a state, of a section, is undermined by attempting to make it the playground of a nation.

"I do not believe that the future of New England lies in agriculture, or forestry, or livestock raising, or even in the raising of apples. Statistics show very clearly that the future of New England lies in developing our manufactures and commerce."

Welladay! These ideas are certainly novel and worth considering. How far are they justified by the facts? Just how far do they apply to Gloucester and Cape Ann?

We quite agree with Mr. Babson that there is danger of the populace, or some of it, relying in its entirety on the summer resort element; in fact that phase of the question had come to our attention some years ago in considering the case of our neighbor, Manchester. Formerly that place was supported by furniture manufacturing but this business has died out; perhaps inevitably, and years ago the town settled down to a summer resort pure and simple, with an appreciable number of the people becoming placeholders on summer resident estates or indirectly drawing their livelihood therefrom. To a degree, a small degree perhaps, the same process holds good on Cape Ann, but not noticeably so.

"The business, the character of the children, the birthrate, the whole moral fiber of a community, state or section, is undermined by attempting to make it the playground of a nation." A serious indictment that.

The business of Cape Ann is fishing and granite cutting and catering to the summer resort interest. How important the latter has grown is revealed in the fact that where 20 years ago the summer resident interest paid one-seventh of the taxes, it now pays one-third, and, given conditions for a building boom, this ratio will approximate 50-50 within 15 years. On the face of it, it would seem to prove Mr. Babson's contention, in part at least.

There is no question but what the fishing business of this city has shown a decrease. But this, many believe, is temporary and due to causes which are being remedied. Gloucester has had its periods of business depression but has come back strong, and there is every reason to believe that history will be repeated. The summer resort interest has certainly nothing in common with the fishing industry. It does not touch upon it in any way. The men who go fishing are not of the sort to content themselves with the humdrum existence ashore of a placeholder on a summer estate. The writer has observed the situation closely for years and has failed to find the slightest trace of any such process. Rather, the summer resident is attracted here because of the glamour which writers invest the heroic calling of the fishermen, plus the unrivalled beauty of the locality. The summer residents as a rule occupy land, considered prior to their coming as of no value for commercial purposes.

As to the decline in the birth rate on account of the coming of the summer resident, we fail to see any connection between the summer resident and the Malthusian theory. Rather the contrary, as far as increase of population is concerned. While it is true and regretable that the large sized New England families have become a thing of the past, it is also true that the declining birth rate is the rule in all sections of the country. Look up the character and standing of the summer people of Cape Ann, and there will be found an element that stands for what is best and most desirable in American life.

Mr. Babson undoubtedly meant that the "moral fibre" of the people is undermined inasmuch as the acceptance of sure thing jobs with the summer interest tends to destroy that initiative which is engendered in a man who is

John B. Grommes and family of Chicago are new comers to Squam this season. They have the Damon house, Cambridge avenue.

State Senator Fred H. Davenport and family of Clinton, N. Y., have taken the upper Graves cottage for June and July. During August and September this residence will be occupied by O. K. Kendall and family of Cambridge.

Rufus Chapin and family of Holyoke are in Red Rock cottage, Diamond cove, for the season.

Miss Edith F. Skillings of Malden has the Munster cottage at Diamond cove.

Rev. Alexander H. Abbott and family of Norwich, Conn., are in the William G. Brown cottage, Washington street, near the Willows settlement.

Fred M. Ives and family of Winchester are for the fourth season occupying the Bott cottage, Norwood Heights.

Mrs. Eugene Byrnes of Washington has the Cunningham cottage, River road, near tne Barnacle.

Frank Hastings and family have come to the Fred Cunningham cottage for another season.

Dr. James W. Worcester and family of New York are established in the Clough cottage for the season.

William G. Bowlen and family of Holyoke are occupying the R. O. C. cottage at Diamond cove.

Arthur L. Albee and family of Brookline are domiciled in the William Ricker cottage, Leonard street.

B. Farnum Smith and family have the Hardwick cottage for July. In August the cottage will be occupied by Philip A. Davis and family of Concord.

Dr. William B. Bartlett of Concord and family are occupying the small Ames cottage during July.

R. F. Litchfield and family of Holyoke have Periwinkle cottage at Diamond cove for the season.

Herbert C. Harrison and family of Lockeport, N. Y., have the lower Graves cottage.

Dr. H. R. Carreth and family of Niagara Falls have the Baldwin cottage.

Arthur A. Kidder and family of Winchester are occupying the Adams homestead the present season.

John H. Harwood and family of Brookline are domiciled in the Achorn cottage, Norwood Heights, for the season. The family of Dr. Achorn will occupy the Chidell cottage in Arlington street.

It is with great satisfaction that we also announce that this summer the exhibition will be under the personal supervision of Miss Helen Wright of the Print division of the Library of Congress, Washington. Her work there, as well as at the Panama exposition in San Francisco in 1915, is widely known and appreciated.

many were her suitors. As the fame of her loveliness traveled, the most prosperous young fishermen from all over the Cape eagerly sought her hand in marriage. Nor did she lack advice from parents and relatives concerning the importance of a wise choice. Elderly dames and world-wise matrons whispered time honored and sage advice in her ears; reminding her that time flies, beauty vanishes, and hay must be made while the sun shines, etc., but to no avail. She was adamant against it all.

Pressed for a reason, she, at last, confessed that in a dream she had seen a ship in the bay opposite her parents' house, from which a boat was lowered, manned by officers and crew, and rowed toward the shore. When the boat touched land a young and handsome man clad in the imposing uniform of the British navy jumped out, while the others returned to their ship, which sailed out of the harbor. The young man found his way to her parents' house and in time—a short time—they were married. Children gladdened their lives and together they lived to a happy old age. Such was her dream and nothing could shake her conviction that it would be verified.

Of course this recital was received with loud expressions of incredulity and again she was besought to accept a likely young suitor who pressed his cause with ardor—but in vain.

Her only support and sole partisan was one of the old wives of the village —an ancient dame who told fortunes and, gossip claimed, had commerce with witches and such like dealers in black magic, who foretold that ill luck at sea or on land would follow if the girl were forced to marry against her inclinations.

Again the scene shifts; this time to the ship on which young Knutsford was serving as midshipman. Knutsford's course was not running smoothly, as he had developed a passion for practical jokes which were not appreciated by his shipmates. Finally the captain issued his ultimatum: "Knutsford, if anything like this happens again, it's keel hauling for you."

But the mischievous midshipman could not restrain his high spirits. His offenses were repeated until action was imperative. Discipline at sea must be maintained at any cost. But to keel haul an officer and a gentleman in the British navy was out of the question. Knutsford, therefore, was given the alternative of being turned ashore at the first land sighted, which proved to be Sandy Bay. He chose the latter.

Naturally the coming of a ship of any kind was an event in the quiet life of the hamlet. All of the inhabitants gathered on the high cliff, nearby the site of the old Linwood hotel. The maritime-wise soon discerned that she was a frigate. They watched eagerly. The ship's sails fluttered aback. A boat was hove over the side and officers were rowed toward the shore. At this juncture the old witch ran among the throng of women and men. "Ho, ho," cackled she, "it's comin' true, it's comin' true. There'll be the greatest weddin' the like of which Sandy Bay never saw." And she reassured the young woman who blushingly stood on the outskirts of the throng, hardly able to believe the evidence of her eyes.

The boat approached the shore and landed a young officer with his trunkful of belongings. Clad in his uniform, his ruddy face and flaxen hair betokened his ancestry, and his gallant bearing, his breeding.

He approached the group with ex-

BROTHERS (?)

On a beach in Gloucester
A child played:
His sun-browned body glistened,
As he ran over the many colored stones,
Polished by the sea's white hand,
But precious only
To children.

Behind the lad
The wind-swept sea sang a stirring song
Of winged boats
To sail
Over the rim of the world!

And, hearing her voice,
The child flew, arrow-swift,
To the water's edge
And gazed afar
Into that world man cannot see.

The boy's strong, half-naked body
Was silhouetted against the flaming sky,
From which a ball of fire
Sank noiselessly into the sea.

* * * *

On a fire escape
In a great crowded city
A child played:
There was not room for him to stand erect,
But on his knees,
Caged by the iron bars,
He watched that same sun.

The elevated train swept by Roaring hungrily,
But, to the ears of that wan child,
It sang—
"Away, away, away—away!"

He moved uneasily,
Yet careful lest he fall to earth—
Paved here
With man-made stone—
And never live to follow
That strong call
To other lands
Dream peopled . . .
He stretched his thin, cramped body
Against the dingy bricks,
And watched a black roof
Cover a ball of fire.

EASTERN POINT

AMONG the most enjoyable affairs of the season thus far and one largely attended by members of the summer colony was the musical held Sunday evening at the "House-on-the Moors," the summer residence of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Atwood of New York City.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Patch of Eastern Point Road, Mr. and Mrs. John Clay of "Finisterre" and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hall of "Stoneacre." Mrs. Hall, who before her marriage was Miss Evelyn Ames of Boston, is an accomplished musician and a well known patron of the art along the shore.

"Stoneacre," the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hall of 260 Beacon street, has as its guests Mrs. Lillian Chapman and daughter, Miss Ray Chapman, of Commonwealth avenue. Mrs. Chapman is a sister of Mrs. Hall.

A delightful open meeting of the Gloucester College club is being planned for tomorrow evening at the home of Mrs. Isaac Patch at Eastern Point Road. Miss Madge Haskell, president of the club, will have charge of the affair.

Miss Helen Patch, who has recently completed her course at "Rosemary," will enter Smith college in the fall.

The recent death of Mrs. Harriet Sherburn Hill, daughter-in-law of Mrs. William B. Hill of Hawthorne Inn, came as a great shock to her many friends along the shore. For many seasons Mrs. Hill had a cottage at Annisquam.

Mrs. F. K. W. Rehn, with her niece, Miss Bessie Hunting of New York City, were among the early arrivals at Hotel Rockaway this season. Mrs. Rehn's son, F. W. K. Rehn, Jr., with his wife, are spending the season at Magnolia.

Among the winter marriages which will be of interest to guests of Hotel Rockaway is that of Miss Ruth Haas, daughter of Mrs. K. M. Haas of Chicago, and Mr. Edward Dunn of East Orange, N. J. Mrs. Dunn, with her family, was a guest at Hotel Rockaway for a number of seasons. Mr. and Mrs. Dunn are making their home at 73 Berwyn street, East Orange.

Miss W. L. Davison of New York City will not occupy her cottage, "Villa Latomia," this season, spending the summer instead in Europe.

Other Eastern Point residents spending the summer in Europe include Miss Cecilia Beaux, the well known artist, whose studio, "Green

BASS ROCKS

ALTHOUGH the recent weather conditions have not been favorable for golfing, the game appears to have a firmer hold than ever and increasing its number of devotees in this locality. Perhaps this is because the Eastern Point links have been discontinued, the sport centering at the Bass Rocks club.

The Saturday evening dances at the clubhouse are a decided success and attract large numbers of the colony. The Jefferson Johnson orchestra furnishes the latest selections for these occasions.

Miss Amelia Jarvie gave a bridge party of five tables Tuesday with 26 at tea.

Monday Mrs. Fleitz of Detroit gave a small bridge party.

The club is planning a large bridge party for the near future.

Old comers to the Moorland who have returned for another season are Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Gillespie of Pittsburg.

Mrs. John F. McFeely and Miss Suzanne McFeely of Pittsburg, former guests, have returned to the Moorland for another season. Miss McFeely is the moving spirit in the presentation in mid-summer of the vaudeville and dramatic productions which have been one of the events of the North Shore.

Mrs. Charles H. Davidson of Cincinnati is another of the Moorlands guests of long standing to arrive for another season.

Among those prominent in social circles registered at the Moorland for the season include Mrs. A. M. Sias, Charles and William M. Sias and Mrs. C. D. Simpson of the Hotel Beaconsfield.

Mrs. Daniel Boone Holmes of Kansas City, prominent in the work of patriotic societies, is spending the season at the Moorland. Mrs. Holmes is the regent of the D. A. R.'s of her home city.

Mrs. Arthur M. Cox of New York City, who has been numbered among the cottage contingent for several years, has taken apartments in the Moorland for the season.

Mrs. Reeve Lewis and family of Washington are among the season's guests at the Moorland, with apartments in one of the hotel cottages.

Mrs. Allen H. Strong, prominent in the social circles of Philadelphia, is one of the season's guests at the Moorland. Mr. Strong is one of the leading officials of the Pennsylvania railroad system.

HOLLIS S. FRENCH, the 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French, left on Tuesday of last week for Labrador, where he will be with the Grenfell Mission for the summer. Both his older brothers have, in previous summers, been members of the mission.

Mrs. Charles F. Bradley of Mt. Vernon street, Boston, is having the Hampton Quartette sing at her home, "Bayberry Ledge," tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Lund of Schenectady, N. Y., are spending the season at "The Barnacle," the attractive tea house of Miss Nancy Flagg on Annisquam River road. Mr. Lund is connected with the General Electric plant at Schenectady.

Dr. William A. Bartlett, state chairman of the Near East Relief committee of Massachusetts, will give an informal talk on Sunday afternoon, July 24th, at the home of Mrs. Hollis French on Squam Rock Road on the relief work so admirably carried on in massacre-stricken sections of Armenia. His theme will be "Hunger Knows No Armistice."

Miss Anita Phipps of Washington has been the guest of Mrs. Paul Haskell of New York, who has taken one of the Moorland hotel cottages at Bass Rocks for a short stay. Miss Phipps, daughter of General Phipps, is on the general staff of the war department as director of all activities connected with the military Hostess Houses throughout the country. On Tuesday evening Miss Phipps and Mrs. Haskell motored over for dinner at Highland Cottage, Annisquam, in order to discuss with Miss Olga Lingard plans in connection with work for the disabled soldiers, in which Miss Lingard is deeply interested.

Former cottagers returning are the Harry B. Duanes of Brookline, who have the "Bakehouse" cottage near the bridge. Dr. Hilbert F. Day and family of Cambridge will occupy it during August.

Eugene L. Howlett and family are this season occupying their cottage in Leonard street.

Henry H. Bowman of Springfield has purchased the Dr. Houghton cottage on Squam River Road and with his family are making it their summer home.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Parker of Detroit are in their cottage at Hermit Ledge.

James H. Dwinell and family of Winchester are for the fourth season tended hand. "Kind folks, I've come to make my home with you. I hope you will receive me and I will try to make myself welcome and willing.' This frank and boyish speech won the good will of all and the people took him into their hearts, so to speak.

With that sense of the propriety of the occasion all instinctively turned toward the father of the maiden, who offered the hospitality of his house. It was accepted. That night the supper was served by the fair hands of the daughter of the house, and young Knutsford, looking up to express his appreciation, met his fate.

As there was no church, there were no bells to chime the gladsome tidings of the wedding on the mild September day when they were made man and wife—the scion of the old house of Knutsford and the fisher maiden of Sandy Bay. The minister came down from the harbor parish (as Gloucester was then called) and made them one. All the village gathered at the wedding feast, where the tables groaned with the choicest viands of land and sea and foaming flagons of the home-brewed ale of the day was quaffed in wishing health and happiness to the bride and groom. Young Knutsford remained steadfast to his New England bride. Tradition says that she sailed overseas with him and that he presented her to his family at the ancestral seat of his family, by whom she was graciously received.

The Knutsford name was maintained on Cape Ann for more than 150 years. The last to bear it were maiden ladies who occupied a modest cottage at Pigeon Cove up to the time of their deaths, 25 years ago. But the blood of the Knutsfords from the distaff side still courses in the veins of the Cape Ann families, who are correspondingly proud of the fact. One of these, a Gloucester business man, acquired a tract of land in Salt Lake City which became valuable, on which was built a hotel called "The Knutsford," to perpetuate the family name.

The writer tells the tale of the first Knutsfords of old Cape Ann as it was told to him by a hard-headed antiquarian and descendant of the jocular and gallant midshipman. It is a pretty story, mingling the occult with romance, and well worth embalming in the amber of verse and prose.

SUZANNE LENGLEN

Will Make Her American Tennis Debut at Essex County Club

Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, world famous French lawn tennis player, will make her American debut on the courts of the Essex County Club at Manchester-by-the-Sea early in August, according to announcement today by Nathaniel W. Niles, the Longwood Cricket Club veteran, who is booking local contests for the Continental star. Mlle. Lenglen is slated to sail from France July 23 with the Davis Cup players of her country, and the tentative plans call for her appearance sometime before the women's national singles championship tournament at the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, L. I., which starts August 15.

HANDKERCHIEF RACE

Miss Hastings Wins in the Ladies' Yaching Event at Annisquam

The women manned the fish boats at the Annisquam club this afternoon and sailed a very interesting race. The race was called by them the handkerchief race, from the fact that the prizes comprise those articles.

The wind was fresh from the southward. The course was a run down the river and to Plum Cove, a reach to the inner mark and a dead beat home. The start was a pretty one, with honors easy, and so it continued the run and reach, the fleet making very even time. On the beat home, however, Miss Hastings showed herself an adept on the fine points of windward work, pulling out ahead finely from the field. The summary:

compelled to cultivate resourcefulness in constantly looking after a livelihood —an element of retainers depending upon the nod and beck of the wealthy. And an increase in this class inevitably will develop a new element in American life—an element heretofore noticeably lacking—similar to that strata of the English, conscious of its class inferiority and prone to look up to its betters. And such an evolution would be regrettable and a step downward in the general social scale.

Marion Enters the Community

Kipling says, "A well educated sense of humor will save a woman when religion, training and home influences fail; and we may all need salvation sometime." I was afraid that my sense of humor was not going to be equal to its task on the day of our Peggy-Party conference.

Peggy arrived, accompanied by that home and match-making ardor for which extremely youthful matrons are renowned, and insisted upon going to McPherson-Symmes with me to learn how to poke a chicken in the ribs to see if it was tender-hearted. I assured her that it wasn't necessary at the shop mentioned, because what with the young vegetables and fresh fruits the very atmosphere was juicy, and how could the heart of a chicken be hard?

"In fact, Peggy," I commented, "I find that I do just as well by telephoning, as the clerks can be depended on to give your order careful and prompt attention, and it is much easier in every way."

Peggy subsided, only to break out in another direction—I was to accompany her to Pattillo's, as she wanted to consult them on interior decorating plans, buy porch furntiure and look at the cretonnes.

It was useless to refuse, so I telephoned to the various members of the party-committee to meet us in town and to think of some way to shelve Peggy, so that we could "conspirit" in peace. Jimmy suggested that we lose Marion, separate to search for her, and then return to Janet's Garden, leaving Peggy to hunt alone. Marion was thrilled at the prospect of playing a star part and we all shared the joy of possessing guilty consciences.

Jimmy stopped to feed the car at Perkins & Corliss—he is so insistent about her source of supplies that I believe he thinks that any other diet would upset her digestion—but Peggy insisted upon racing up the hill to see the Gorham tablets on the cenotaph. They are that exquisite green-bronze, which first attracts and then rests the eye, and the workmanship is so perfect that it enshrines the names of our heroes with fitting beauty and dignity.

"Only Gorham could have done it!" exclaimed Peggy, as Jimmy overtook us, commanding, "Forward march!"

We sped to Pattillo's, where the manager seemed so competent that we left him to solve Peggy's problems while we each gravitated toward our own specialty. Jimmy promptly lay down on the ideal porch hammock—a veritable bed, and yet delightful to the sense of sight, in gray, white and rose, with cushion to match. Chubby immediately sat down at a Tiffin table to imagine food on it and Phyllis opposite. His reverie was rudely interrupted by Phyllis herself, who demanded admiration for the cretonnes.

"They are the loveliest designs," she insisted. "I searched all over New York and Boston and I haven't seen any that equal these. They are stamped from a block print that is over a hundred years old, perhaps. That is why they are so quaint and unusual."

"Of course they are good," I admitted, "because Phyllis is an artist, but I'd rather have this Hour-glass chair, I if I must be quaint."

"And I this hammock, if I may be faint from listening to Peggy planning to let Pattillo redecorate all her rooms!" remarked Jimmy. "Remember that we have to meet Molly at Gray's sporting store in ten minutes."

This caused a grand flurry that deposited us at Gray's, where Molly was waiting for her films and discussing the total depravity of tennis balls which were always losing themselves in the hedge at one end of her court. Gray's sympathetically supplied new balls and suggested that no matter what she lost in a sporting line they could replace it.

"Why, Mollie," teased Peggy, "I thought that you said you never had to wait for films at Grey's."

"We brought them in last night and they are promised for three o'clock—it is five minutes to three now—I don't call that waiting," replied Mollie serenely. "And their speed isn't the sole reason why I come here. It is the only place in town where the prints are cut the exact size. I paste mine in books and it is so much better looking to have an even and uniform edge on all my prints. I wonder how they do it."

"They have installed a plant, Genus Photographia, which cost over 500 dollars," instructed Jimmy, "just for fussy people like you. The reason you don't have to wait is that it turns out a thousand developed and printed films a day."

"Don't get professional until you can raise a beard, Jimmy," advised Mollie.

Verbal blows were prevented by the timely appearance of the negatives in question and Mollie blandly passed around pictures of herself to be enjoyed.

Peggy enthused over one taken in the gown that Mollie bought last week at Lamson & Hubbard's.

"But you should see it on me," said Mollie with pardonable conceit. "It is pale pink chiffon and Irish lace. Gerry (Mollie's latest) says I look like Dresden china in it."

Phyllis arched her black eyebrows inquiringly. "Lamson & Hubbard's? I thought they were a great fur house.?"

"If you studied the Cape Ann Shore," Jimmy reproached her, "you'd know by this time that Lamson & Hubbard Co. are not only the 'largest retailing and manufacturing furriers in America,' but that they carry exclusive models—from Balch Price Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.—in every line, from sport to evening dresses."

"Speaking of fur, nobody knows how dry I am," broke in Chubby dismally. "I give you my word that my throat is fur-lined!"

"It is a nation-wide sensation," agreed Jimmy, "but I know that you are not thinking of the sufferings of others, but of our proximity to Barker's full-sized sodas or Wetherell's famous Hawaiian Split."

"Barker's chocolate—they use real cream—polished glasses the size that I thought we'd only see in museums after the war," mumbled Chubby to Phyllis incoherently, but appealingly, "and Wetherell originated the Hawaiian meal—must patronize the imaginative genius in any art."

"We have to visit that Davis fish palace and the new Gloucester National Bank building," replied Phyllis, the inexorable sightseer. "I insist upon seeing Gloucester first before we supinely sup cooling beverages."

Peggy looked diagnostically at the assorted couple as Chubby, with the air of a hero, obediently led the way. "You used to call Chubby my portable scenery last year," she remarked, "but now he looks more like Phyllis' adjustable doormat!" And right there the match-making gleam was born in Peggy's lovely eyes.

Jimmy brought up the rear with Marion. "Now, kid, you understand that the minute we have 'done' these buildings you are to fade away and beat it for home in Chubby's car. His chauffeur will be waiting. Then we shall notify Peggy that you are lost. See?"

Marion nodded in the superior fashion of a theatrical star listening to a stage hand.

As Davis' window boxes dawned on the eye, Marion even condescended to speak to Jimmy. "I have been waiting to see this place ever since their model passed us in the parade, but I hate to go in as it is sure to be messy—fish houses always are. I suppose that the expression, 'poor fish,' grew out of the sordid side of their housing problem."

"Pardon me," interrupted Jimmy, "the phrase doubtless grew out of the human need to find a suitable description for people who judge places without seeing them. Every inhabitant of Gloucester is proud of Davis', where the tang of the sea is preserved intact and everything is so clean and shipshape that you think you have arrived at a fish paradise!"

But it was the guide who really convinced Marion—to begin with he had sea-blue eyes. He started right in on the old legend of how Mr. Davis sent a pail of brine-preserved mackerel to a friend—with the result that all said friend's acquaintances demanded similar kettles of fish, until the big idea occurred to Mr. Davis of allowing the fish to introduce him to a nation of new friends! To this day Davis follows the straight-to-the-customer

MAGNOLIA

The cottage colony numbers among its late arrivals Mr. and Mrs. Hibben of Dedham. The Hibbens were summer residents of Magnolia in former seasons, and are again occupying the Macdonald bungalow on Shore Road.

Congratulations are being showered on Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Allyn on the recent arrival of a son, born at the Phillips House the middle of June. Mrs. Allyn, before her marriage, was Miss Jesse Macdonald and was well known at Magnolia.

A marriage of great interest to the Oceanside colony which recently took place in Philadelphia was that of Miss Helen Coats of Philadelphia and Mr. Robert Stead of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Coats has been a guest at Hotel Oceanside for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Stead are expected here the latter part of the month.

Mrs. Sidney Ruggles Small with her two small children, Margaret and Elizabeth, are spending the summer with Mrs. Small's mother, Mrs. J. Harrington Walker, at "Rockledge," the Walker residence on Shore Road.

Mrs. Katherine Pillsbury Bragg of Cambridge was the guest of the Misses Marjorie and Marion Dakin over the recent week-end.

Miss Emily Gray of Cambridge is again spending the season at Hotel Aborn, where he has been a guest for a number of seasons.

Miss Helen Drake of the Blackstone hotel, Chicago, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Harry Farnum, at "Sun Dial Cottage," the Farnum residence on Shore Road. Miss Drake will spend the month of August at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hoyle of Wellesley Farms have been entertaining guests over the recent week-end. Mrs. Hoyle's daughters, the Misses Marcia, Muriel and Phoebe Hoyle, are spending the summer at camp.

Magnolia summer residents will be interested to learn of the recent birth of a son to Mr. and Mrs. James Macdonald of Belmont. Mr. Macdonald, a former Harvard football star, spent his boyhood in Magnolia, where he early showed his ability as an athlete.

Miss Velma Morse of Cambridge will spend the season as usual with her niece, Miss Eleanor H. Jones, at "Highfields."

Dr. and Mrs. George H. Binney, Jr., of Nahant were the recent guests of Dr. Binney's mother, Mrs. Edith W. Binney, at Hotel Oceanside.

Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln Ashcroft and son, Clarence Woodbury Ashcroft, were recent guests at the home of Dr. Mary D. Dakin of Fuller street.

Mr. B. Lord Buckley, who, with his mother, Mrs. Georgianna Buckley, left New York City a few weeks ago en route for the Yellowstone, have arrived in Minneapolis on Sunday last. The Buckleys spent a number of seasons at Hotel Aborn and have a number of friends in this section of the shore.

method and continues collecting friends.

Marion petted the pails in the mackerel department and was fascinated by a faucet that chemists have taught to produce brine on tap.

"These wire covers that grace the tops of the pails are wonderful for pie and cake coolers," said Peggy, posing for an old hand. "The guide says that housewives write to have their old ones replaced, as they can't face a new-born cake without them."

"Look!" exclamed Phyllis, who was bending over the pails stacked for mailing, "this one is going to Aunt Edith in California!"

Thereupon we all tried to scrape up a speaking acquaintance with the pails, but only succeeded in discovering that every state in the Union was represented.

"And we have no one on the road to represent us," proudly remarked the guide. "Our fish are trained to do it for us."

"Some fish!" said Chubby(watching the great cods being expertly reduced from 114 pounds plus skin and bones to fifty pounds of solid meat without them. "You have taught them to deliver the goods, too, as we only have to pay for what we eat, which is something no restaurant can boast these days."

"Can it! Chubby, look at the department we have entered!" whispered Jimmy mysteriously.

Of course Chubby 'bit' as the hospitable guide treated us to the most delicious lobster that ever folded its claws in a can.

Davis has a cannery in Nova Scotia where the fish, while their tails are still flapping, enter the cans and the elect among the lobsters are caught in their first season in a manner that is envied by the social dealers in the human variety; therefore we connot really blame Peggy for madly ordering lobster paste and PikNikPa galore.

On the roof, overlooking the first clean wharf that she had ever seen, Marion nobly atoned for her snap judgment by admiting to Jimmy, "It is as clean as the battleship that we visited last week and it smells even nicer!"

We had hard work to persuade her to come with us to the Gloucester National bank, but once there she was stimulated to further enthusiasm and we could scarcely keep pace with her investigations — "gyrations," Jimmy called them.

"This building," Jimmy held forth

Saturday's Race Sailed During Terrific Thunderstorm—Up River Course Sailed Sunday

Owing to the dense fog in Ipswich bay, the Annisquam boats were sent on the river course Sunday afternoon from a point abreast the yacht club to a buoy near Rust Island, returning to the finish mark and repeat.

The wind was from the southeast, puffy and fluky. It was a broad reach going up, with a hitch on the starboard tack coming home.

In the Bird class Jack Hooper in the Tern got the start and held first position to the turn off Rust Island, where she got under a hill and lost the wind, while the Mavis came tearing along carrying a strong puff, passing into the lead, which she held to the end, the Albatross making second place.

In the Cat class the Kittiwake got the best of the start with the Copycat second, the latter passing into the lead half way down the course, but being overtaken by the Catenary, John Norton, sailing master, the latter thereafter showing the way to the finish, Copycat regaining second place. The fish boats sailed an interesting race. The summary:

Saturday afternoon's race was sailed in a terrific thunder shower. The storm broke after the boats got outside, a southeast wind prevailing at the start. Bolts struck on all sides. in his best vein, "contains everything that one can desire for comfort and convenience, but the object that gets the public is this marvelous Mosler door of manganese steel, which can neither be drilled nor burned, and has four time locks to protect the vaults from His Satanic Majesty, if necessary. Observe the ornamental shape of this door, circular, like a giant pinwheel. It is so delicately adjusted that although it weighs twelve tons, a child can move it with ease."

"But, Jimmy, dear, after all you are not trying to sell the door," reminded Peggy, "and I am trying to pass in and see the new storage room where I intend to store all my superfluous, but valuable, belongings this winter."

As usual, everybody rooted for some particular point of interest: Chubby approved the private booths where he could cut coupons in peace; Jimmy, the fact that each teller had his own individual vault—"Sound business," quoth Jimmy, the master of high finance, who earned a hundred dollars last summer; Phyllis, the old-rose hangings and the directors' room with its beautiful painting by John Cook and its interesting old steel engraving; Marion, the attractive rest and writing rooms, because they were they were the only ones that she could understand and, also, because she could slip out from these to play her role of lost child.

Our shock was what we expected Peggy's to be when we notified her that Marion was among the missing and she refused to be alarmed!

"I was always escaping when I was a flapper," she said tranquilly, as she continued to wend her way to The Greater New York store to see their wonderful bargains in skirts. Furthermore, she refused to allow us to leave her, but made us all trail over to Jason's, whose motto is "Good Goods at Low Prices," because she wanted to see a store that was proud of lowering prices. (Jimmy got her out by remarking that everyone knew that Jason's specialty was infants' wear.) But when she wound up at the National House Furnishing Co. we, knowing their excellent stock and fearing "another household bat," persuaded her to let us escort her home.

To our surprise, Marion had not arrived and Chubby's chauffeur reported that she had dismissed him instead of carrying out her instructions! We were petrified and told Peggy that the child must be found, and by this time I think Peggy began to believe us—in spite of the fact that she didn't know our plans—when in walked Marion, looking very much surprised to see us en masse.

"Where have you been?" we demanded in unison.

"I went to see the editor of The Cape Ann Shore about some writing that I am going to do," she looked defiantly at Jimmy, whose face expressed frozen scorn; "and he says I'm just as much one of the 'community' as Jimmy is and that my manuscript will be given every courteous attention."

And before we had time to digest the announcement of Marion's sudden entrance into the community life, she continued: "That editor knows everybody, and he says that the man who took us through Davis' is married already."

Marion was so hurt at the thoughtless roar which greeted her confession that even Jimmy was moved.

"Well," he said comfortingly, "did not that same guide spend valuable time illustrating that there were plenty more fish in the sea?"

But Peggy, whom Marion adores, had to lead the child away to attain that poise which became one who had so lately dedicated herself to a life of elevating the community by her pen. So Marion succeeded after all in furnishing an intermission for us to feverishly arrange the last details that will help to make our Peggy-party the success of the season.

alone of that particular craft, but to the type which was then evolved and has since become universally utilized by mariners all over the world.

It was fitting then that when our Nova Scotia cousins, proud of the achievements of their fishing fleet, and confident of its superiority to anything the Yankees possessed, flung over the border their challenge for a series of races for the International Fisherman's cup, that this place, which originated the schooner, should accept and defend the honor of the city and the country. Gloucester had always set forth the prowess of its fishing craft and their sturdy crews and now was a time to put these expressions to the test of proof.

Although but a short time was given to accept the challenge, the schooner Esperanto, just in from a fishing voyage, was selected to defend the supremacy of Gloucester and America. Her fare was discharged in record breaking time and volunteers worked like beavers in smoothing the hull and tautening the rigging and tuning her up generally for the races.

Meanwhile, the contest attracted not only the interest of this country but became of international import. Here, it was evident, was to be a race between the craft of the red-blooded of the sea which promised to be the real thing. And so the Esperanto, which was built in 1897 for the mackerel seining fishery, sailed forth out of the harbor with a royal send-off for good fortune from the entire community.

Well, the result surprised our over-confident Canadian friends. Their ship was the pride of Lunenburgh, the Delawanna.

Three straight races were won in Halifax harbor, on water of the Canadians' choosing. Nothing could be fairer or more clean cut and the Canadians, like good sporting men, acknowledged their defeat and at once set at work to build a craft that would regain the coveted trophy.

This series of races will be sailed this fall, probably during the last of October, in Halifax bay, and will excite widespread interest.

In the meantime, the Esperanto came again into the public eye. May 30, while fishing for codfish off the dreaded Sable Island, which lies off the Nova Scotia coast, she struck a submerged wreck and sunk in 20 minutes, the crew having barely time to escape, being picked up by a passing schooner.

For the first time in the history of the business, efforts were made by a salvaging company to raise her in the belief that she would prove invincible as the defender of the cup.

She sunk in 54 feet of water and when she foundered the crew had secured a full fare of about 350,000 pounds of salted codfish.

The attempt has been viewed with much interest here. Although the Esperanto has been partially raised to the surface four times, all efforts to secure the craft and tow her back to port up to this writing have been in vain.

forts of man to wrest his prize from him.

Perhaps it is fitting that the Esperanto should remain submerged, fathoms deep, in the great harbor of the port of missing ships—in the marine Valhalla of the treacherous Sable Island bottom, gripped by its tentacles of sand. There her fame is secure but her name will ever live in the annals of those who thrill at recital of the deeds of those who go down to the sea in ships.

These races are to be an annual fixture, to be sailed alternately off the Nova Scotia coast and in the water adjacent to Cape Ann, after the close of the fishing season. These will be preceded by trial races between the vessels of the two nationalities, to determine which shall have the honor of defending and contesting for the cup.

THE ROCKAWAY

At the Rockaway, Rocky Neck, Proprietor W. A. Publicover is entertaining a house full to overflowing. The guests are enjoying boating, fishing, bathing and the numerous other seaside diversions. This house is headquarters for the amateur deep sea fishermen of the summer colony, some of whom have arrived and are overhauling their fishing tackles and news of big catches may be looked for in the near future. The Shore offers a desirable prize to the guest who lands the biggest fish in July. Proprietor Publicover is to be the judge.

The arrivals at the Rockaway: Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Vaughn, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Hoops, Sarah Woodbury, F. F. Coffin, Ralph W. Ellinwood, Bertha Morse, Lena Holzman, Lilian Gold, Ray Morse, Grace M. WONASQUAM LODGE

Wonasquam Lodge opened June 14 with a large delegation of Smith college graduates who have made this charming and homelike hotel the Mecca for their annual June house party. Situated as it is facing the ocean and Annisquam river, its wide piazzas command one of the finest views on the North Shore.

The party, which was chaperoned by Mrs. Edw. O. Brown of Rhinelander, Wis., and W. D. MacDougall of Washington, also included a number of Harvard law students and the days were all too short to include the many boat and auto rides planned daily.

Dancing was enjoyed by all in the large music room and the open fireplaces with the cheerful log fires burning made the cool evening comfortable for those who were less actively inclined. The party included:

Miss Florence Brown, Rhinelander, Wis.; Miss Elizabeth Clapp, West Newton; Miss Rosa Rosenthal, Baltimore; Miss Isabella McLaughlin, Chicago; Miss Helen Payson, Portland; Miss Margaret Row, Indianapolis; Miss Lois Whitney, St. Cloud, Minn.; Miss Charlotte MacDougall, Washington; Miss Margaret C. MANCHESTER REGATTA DAY

Yachting and Other Water and Land Sports Held During Thunderstorm

Saturday was regatta day at the Manchester Yacht club and the annual water sports were also held, the yacht race being the first event scheduled for the afternoon, participated in by the boats of the skiff class only.

The inside course was sailed in light airs, favorable to this class. The boats were sent twice around, making a course of about six miles. Gerald D. Boardman sailed the winning boat, Norton Wigglesworth being a close second. The summary:

Name and owner	El time
Gerald Boardman	0:39:48
Norton Wigglesworth	0:40:22
J. P. Chase	0:40:43
Matthew Bartlett	0:41:49
William H. Coolidge, Jr.	0:42:15
A. F. Sortwell	0:44:45
Wallace Goodrich	0:45:54

Philip Chase, Samuel Vaughan, Frank Wigglesworth, H. P. McKean, Jr., John Noble, P. T. Jackson, Gordon Means, H. B. Sawyer and Henry S. Grew also competed.

The water sports were held off the club floats, the clubhouse and verandas being well filled. Messrs. Gordon Abbott, Wallace Goodrich and Henry B. Sawyer were the judges.

The first event had scarcely finished when a severe thunderstorm broke, and the remainder of the program was run off in a deluge of rain, yet the contestants and spectators held on to the end.

Norton Wigglesworth had charge of running the events, assisted by Samuel Eliot. The first event was walking the pole, a majority of the contestants being in costume, a prize being offered for both costume and distance walking. John Chase was costumed to represent the Indian chief Masconomo; Henry B. Sawyer, Jr., Chinese coolie; Howard sturgis, chef; George Sturgis, Dutch boy; Henry Putnam, as Mrs. Walter Baker; John Noble, Pierott; T. Dennie Boardman, Uncle Si.

Others who contested in the walking event for the flag at the end of the pole were P. T. Jackson, Jr., John Cookman, James Mandell, James Grew and Miss Barbara Welch.

First prize for best costume was won by T. Dennie Boardman, as a countryman; second, John Noble, Pierrot. John Noble also took the prize for walking the longest distance.

The second event was a tub race, in which John Mandell, John Chase, H. B. Sawyer, Jr., John Noble, George Sturgis, Howard Sturgis and P. T. Jackson competed. It was won by John Mandell, with H. B. Sawyer, Jr., second.

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA

The season, which has been unusually slow in opening, is now rapidly getting into full swing.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Carr of Boston have arrived at their cottage, "The Jungle," on Highland avenue.

Mrs. S. Parker Bremer, who has been at the Bremer cottage at Smith Point for a month, left this week for a visit at West Dover, Vt.

Miss M. E. Williams is occupying the Curtis cottage on the Greeley Curtis estate for the month of July.

Mrs. R. B. Tweedy is occupying the Bradley cottage at Sandy Hollow, Smith Point, for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Stevens, son-in-law and daughter of the late Mrs. J. D. Safford, have arrived at their cottage on University lane for the summer.

Philip T. Chase has taken the Pickering cottage on Sea street.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Brewer, the W. H. Beers and Miss Gertrude White, who have spent several seasons in Manchester, are again guests at Brownland cottages for the summer.

BEVERLY FARMS

Mr. and Mrs. William D. Eohier, Jr., formerly Miss Elaine Denegre of Beverly Farms, have returned from their wedding trip and are at their summer home at West Manchester.

Mrs. Grafton W. Minot and her children have closed their residence in Washington and will spend the summer months at their summer home at Beverly Farms.

Mrs. W. Harry Brown will leave Pittsburg for her summer home, "Sunset Hill," off Price street, about the middle of July. A number of improvements have been made upon the Brown estate this spring.

PLAYHOUSE-ON-THE-MOORS

Review of First Set of Plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors

Our judgment of the first group of plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors must be even more imperfect than most judgments, owing to the great storm on the first night that played havoc with the lights, and the drumming of the rain on the roof that drowned the actors' voices. But as a first word—or nearly a first—let us say that the actors rose splendidly to the emergency and were surprisingly little put out by the intermittent thunder and darkness. In presenting Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna," it was wisely decided to omit the first act; so Mrs. Louise Closser Hale gave the substance of that omission and showed what art can do with even the stripped bones of a synopsis.

The tent scene of "Monna Vanna" is an extraordinary difficult act to play and needs a constant variation of tempo to keep it going. The players showed the result of skillful coaching. Mr. Buswell's handsome carriage and voice were, as always, a pleasure. Mrs. Parsons showed deep feeling and poetic appreciation and understanding of Monna Vanna and too much can not be said in praise of her interpretation. Edward Massey, as Guido, gave a fine performance in the role of angry, outraged husband. Hobart Nichols as Guido's father, though on the stage but little, gained the sympathy of his audience.

Too much can not be said for the artistic staging of "Monna Vanna." The intimate little stage was beautifully arranged. Simplicity of setting and richness of color was the keynote. The picture of the tent scene, as the curtain rose, made by the spots of brilliant color of costumes and hangings, unified by the skillful use of indirect lighting, was one to carry away in memory with pleasure. In consulting our program we find that Rita Langhorne and Martha Flint, Reginald Lawrence, Robert Goode, had charge of costumes, scenery and lighting, respectively, and they are certainly to be congratulated.

Moliere's "The Doctor by Compulsion" followed. It was played on a bare scaffolding of unpainted planks with no other scenery than three chairs. As good luck would have it,

COL. ANDREW'S CANDIDACY

Summer residents and others along the North Shore will hear with peculiar gratification the news that Col. A. Piatt Andrew of Eastern Point, yielding to the importunities of many influential citizens, has consented to run for Congress in the Sixth Essex district.

This news should be especially gratifying, inasmuch that it is seldom that a man of the calibre of Col. Andrew is offering for this office and where the office has so importuned the man it is the duty of all good citizens, irrespective of party, to do all they possibly can by example and precept to bring about his nomination, which in this district is equivalent to an election.

Col. Andrew exemplifies at once the scholar and patriot. He has had an extended experience in Washington as one of the chief officials of the monetary commission, and his work during the World War was especially brilliant. He went in at the start in 1914 and organized the American ambulance corps which proved of inestimable value to the French wounded and his labors were such that he was accorded the medal of the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre.

At the entrance of this country into the war he was commissioned in the army and won the D. S. M. medal which bears its own attestation.

Col. Andrew is a graduate of Princeton and has given close attention to economic subjects and his ac-

MEDICINE AND MOLIERE

On August 9, 1866, Moliere's Le Medecin Malgre Lui was presented to the public. Moliere considered it a "flimsy bit of wit," but his audience hilariously proclaimed it a mirth potion of magic power.

Plays that deal with medicine always appeal to the afflicted public, but give us medicine, mirth—witness the success of "The Boomerang" some years ago—and Moliere and the combination has a "run" that cover centuries! However, if those of us who came over in the Mayflower have inherited a propensity for taking our pleasures seriously, Moliere is equally satisfactory—we defy any one who has suffered at the hands of the profession, and paid dearly in hard earned cash for the privilege to see Le Medecin Malgre Lui without the exceeding joy of the dumb who have found an able interpreter. Of course, we have the greatest respect for the M.D., but like Thibaud's wife, we, too, have been "sick o' the hypocrisy" and have been offered "medicated cheese" as a remedy.

In 1896 Professor H. Folet, a French physician, member of the Faculty of Medicine at Lille, published a truly delicious book called "Moliere and the Physicians of His Time," in which he proved conclusively that Moliere was not giving us a burlesque of existing conditions, but "realistic studies" from the medical research work of his time! Moliere was "coached" in all seriousness by his own doctor in his famous theories of the temperaments, the four humors, and such quaint relics of a by-gone day.

Professor Folet quotes authentic records of Louis XIII, who suffered at the hands of his physician in one year no less than 215 prescriptions, 212 lotions and 47 blood lettings! He also refers us to that remarkable document known as the "Journal of Louis XIV's Health," which was kept day by day for fifty-nine years. Imagine the sum total of his—well, we consider it wiser to leave it all to the imagination. Suffice to say that he was medically treated "not wisely but too well."

Of course, as Sganarelle responded when Geronte humbly remarked that he thought the heart was situated on the left side and the liver on the right, "Yes, formerly they were so; but we

A WINDOW

That fire-belching dragon, the rus'ling train,
Roared its narrow way
Past houses of many heartless windows—
"Tenements, tenements, tenements!" it screamed.
On the ledge of one window
There grew
Two golden sunflowers
Placed like tall tapers on a wayside shrine:
And a vine
Ran up each side of the window
Covering the red and even bricks
To make a living frame . . . .
It set me wondering of the soul within
Who draped the window—
Is it a lover of leaves
That make designs upon the very sky?
Perchance, a brother poet
Who, shutting out all the world
With little green curtains,
Forgets his poverty
And grows rich in dreams.
Or is it a sun-worshiper from lands afar
Whose color-famished heart
Feeds upon those orange petals?
It may be some pale girl, in whose keen ear
The pipes of Pan resound
Whence came the earth
In which her green things grow?
Does she at night send Groping thoughts—
Godward—
Up her vines?
And when the sun
Flames from those burnished disks
Does she know that they light her altar?

* * * *

In all the stony frames of these houses
That never wince as the dragon hurtles by,
There is no picture
So human
As this one vine-clad window!

—Alice C. Rodewald.

CAPTAIN CHARLES P. VAUGHAN HONORED

The summer colony along the North Shore will be interested in learning that Capt. Charles P. Vaughan of Salem, who for years had a fine summer residence in the Peabody suburbs, was awarded the degree of Doctor of Science at the recent commencement of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Penn.

After graduation from Phillips Andover he became associated with his father and his brother, Maj. Ira Vaughan, in the Vaughan Machine Co. of Peabody, which developed the largest leather working machine business in the world.

Later he and his brother, Ira, acquired sole ownership in the Dungan, Hood & Co. leather corporation of Philadelphia, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world.

Capt. Vaughan has always been active in matters of public concern. He served ten years in the Massachusetts militia, retiring with the rank of captain.

During the war he rendered invaluable service, giving unsparingly of his time to Liberty bond drives, being chairman of Industrial Group 19, whose subscriptions to the various loans to-the fuse blew out to stay just after "Monna Vanna," so the "Doctor" was played by the light of two high-standing candelabra, held by richly robed pages. The spirited acting and the rare courtliness of the Louis XIV costumes in that mellow illumination gave extraordinarily the thrill of seeing an old play in an old time, of rolling back the past and revealing there the ancient drama in the artless and unbuttoned days of its youth.

Carl Nordell as Sganarelle, the center of that brilliant farce, gave amply the loose open-air freedom of this greatest of clowns. All the cast was so fine and true that it is a shame not to be able to devote space to each one. It was a performance far above the average in its joyous ease and vigor. We wish to mention two characterizations, however, who linger brilliantly in memory: Madeleine Laurent's virago, Martine and Hobart Nichols' Squire Robert of the overdelicate flower.

Miss Cunningham and Mrs. Evans most assuredly gave us a highly artistic bill, which was a fine achievement of earnest, eager striving for what is fine and interesting on the stage.

The entertainment at the Community Dramatic School last Saturday was a talk by Mrs. Louise Closser Hale. Mrs. Hale had announced Diction as her subject, but kindly said she had found the Playhouse so excellent in this respect that this topic was not needed. She gave an amusing account of her early Western diction and her experiences in a Boston "School of Oratory." She said her second choice of subjects had been "The Ethics of the Theatre," that is, the conduct of the actor back stage, his silence, that the actors playing the scene may not be disturbed. But even that had to be abandoned, for she found the off-stage silence more admirably respectful of the actors on the scene in the Playhouse-on-the-Moors than in most professional theatres. Mrs. Hale then gave an author's reading from one of her books, and, as an especial treat, read from the proof sheets her soon-to-be-published one-act comedy, "To Meet the Prince." Miss Goinsette Talma played on the piano, and Miss Madeleine Laurent sang three songs, Luigi Arditi's "Il Bacio," Teresa del Riegi's "Thank God for a Garden," and Xavier Leroux's lovely "Le Nil."

have changed all that. We practise medicine nowadays on quite another system."

And yet, we know, today, a charming young woman who obediently eats raw onions at her doctor's command —her fiance eats them with her: "greater love hath no man than this"! —and a wild Westerner of our acquaintance reclines upon an ironing board, tipped so that her heels are higher than her head, twice daily, to gratify her physician! Is it any wonder that strange practices never die when human beings invite such treatment? How Moliere would have enjoyed the two cases cited! For Moliere, as Romain Rolland has so aptly worded it, was an "opulent mixture of opposed temperaments; he had two natures, as it were, one that analyzed life with ironic finesse, another that reveled gaily in it."

Speaking of Romain Rolland, it was he who called our attention to the fact that "in France the first man who was able to realize the ideals of a People's Theatre was Maurice Pottecher." And how did he set about it? By producing, on September 22, 1892, a patois translation of Moliere's "Le Medecin Malgre Lui," at the little village of Bussang, with great success.

A short time ago we had a famous tug-of-wits at the Doctor's Service Corps concerning highly unsatisfactory dentistry which we refused to encourage financially. It was evident that the excellent representative of that worthy organization thought we were right, as he reduced the bill to a minimum, but he expatiated on the impossibility of our proving it in court. "Every one," he insisted, "stands by the doctor. We are all liable to error and no man would be a doctor if he had to face his mistakes." So thought Moliere, and I went home to read that perfect passage in which Sganarelle speaks of the advantages of his new trade . . . "I begin to think I'll stay a doctor all my life for whether he does well or whether he does ill he is paid the same." And I found myself able to dismiss my recent experience with a broad smile.

After all, laughter is the best medicine for the ills of this life, and he who laughs most, laughs longest, so if one must have a doctor let him hie to Moliere, who is, also, a "doctor in spite of himself."

THE ROCKPORT SHORE

MORE and more Rockport is becoming a resort for artists. Annisquam and East Gloucester was once their favorite summer habitat, and many of the guild still make those places their summer headquarters, but Rockport has many natural charms which make their appeal. The march of improvement, which has eliminated much of the picturesque in the two places first mentioned, is not as evident in this locality, hence there are more desirable subjects offering for their brushes.

These artists, summer and permanent residents, have formed an association comprising a membership of fifty. The following officers were elected:

Harry Vincent, president; Albro B. Hibbard, secretary; Mr. Smith, treasurer. These, with Chester P. Dodge as chairman, C. S. Kalin, W. Lester Stevens and Miss Turney, comprise the executive committee.

It was voted to hold an art week from August 17 to 27 and the Congregational society has kindly tendered the use of its vestry for the exhibit. A costume ball will be held at the Town hall in connection with the event, the music for which will be under the direction of Mr. Bauer of the New York Symphony orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Cutting of Newburyport are again at their Marmion way house for the summer.

John Bolinger and family of Newton Center have one of the Harvey cottages on Marmion way.

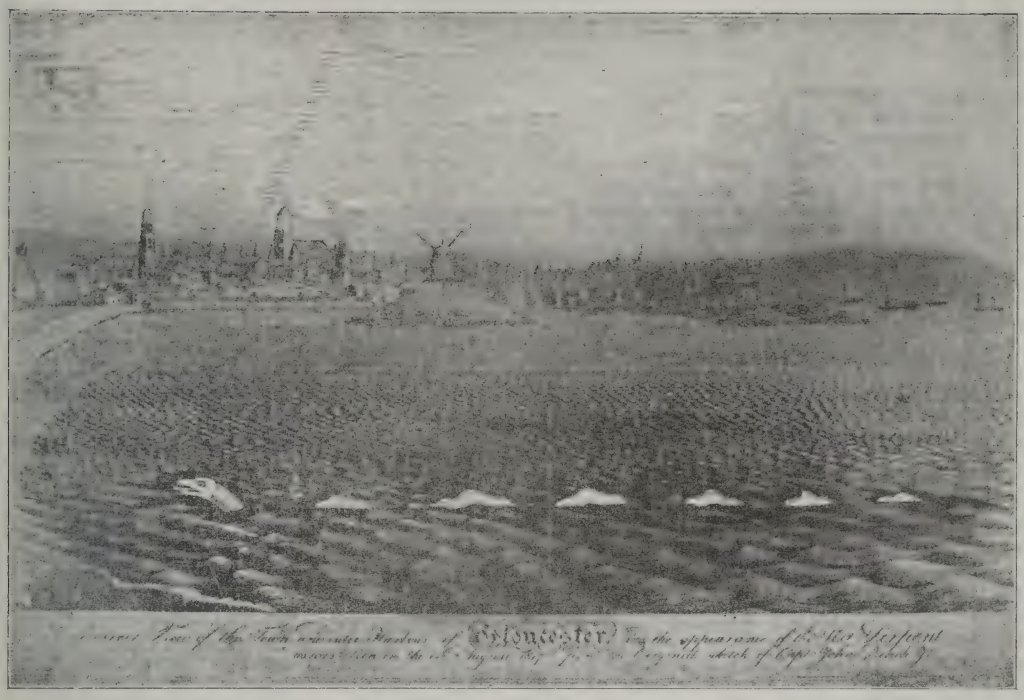
tivities have won him national and international reputation.

When such a man stands up to speak in the national halls of legislation he commands attention and reflects credit on the character of the electorate which he represents.

It is rarely that a man with such broad practical experience and such high ideals offers for such a place and if the press of Boston and the district accurately reflects public opinion he will receive the nomination by an impressive majority. Nevertheless, the "machine," angered that a man of such independent characteristics and not a pliable rubber stamp, is offering —will leave no stone unturned to compass his defeat. The primary comes early in September and every one should get out and by voice and vote give Col. Andrew an impressive majority.

VISIT OF THE SEA SERPENT

Gloucester in 1817



From PRINGLE'S "HISTORY OF GLOUCESTER"

A news item this week recounts how a crowd of summer residents along the Nantasket shore gazed, goggle-eyed, at some sort of a sea monster described as from 16 to 40 feet in length and answering to the description of the sea serpent.

The "sarpint" has become a regular fixture in New England summer resort waters and almost nearly every season disports himself along the coast, often seen, but never captured.

Yet there are many who believe in the existence of the sea serpent. In August, 1817, one came into Gloucester harbor and made quite a stay. His appearance was sworn to and affidavits to that effect were filed by the leading citizens of the community. After a leisurely visit his serpentship made off for other waters.

So deep and widespread was the interest in the event that an engraving of the occurrence, after a sketch by Capt. John Beach, Jr., leading citizen, and one time collector of the port, was made and found a ready sale. The above engraving is a reproduction, which was made from what is believed to be the only copy in existence—then in a faded and frayed condition. It gives, as stated, a correct view of the town and outer harbor at that period.

Windmill hill, on which stood a windmill for grinding corn, stands out conspicuously in the center. It is now the site of the Tavern. From the left, along the beach upland, is the old rope walk. The First Parish (Unitarian) church in Middle street and, further to the left, the spire of the Universalist church stands out prominently, as well as other buildings of note.

To the right of Windmill hill, in the middle foreground, is what is now "Little Italy," Fort Point, given over to the Italian fishermen. In those days the virgin evergreen growth was not disturbed.

Further to the right was the old fort, first erected in 1743, to repel a threatened invasion of the French, a marked object with its whitewashed ramparts.

Among the buildings depicted are Tappan's Tavern, now the Community house; the Collins school building at the extreme left and the large gambreled roof structures, many of which are still standing, the residences of the well-to-do of the period. The East Gloucester territory stands out as unbuilt upon.

In 1884 the sea serpent again paid a visit to these parts. On a day in the summer of that year, when a number of the legal fraternity were holding an outing at Pigeon cove, his marine highness rolled up near the rocks and disported himself in full view of the gathering, all of which testified to his presence and movements. Among these were Judge Sumner D. York of the Eastern district court, Charles A. Russell, Esq., and others who can corrobrate the accounts then published.

Learned scientists maintain that such a creature does exist, although there are many who catalogue the sea snake with the boojum and the snark and the dodo.

TO MY LADY IN SEARCH OF THE DISTINCTIVE

A SHORT, SMOOTH MOTOR TRIP TO THE SHOPS OF

MAGNOLIA

The Hotel Oceanside was the scene of a merry dinner party the past week, the host and hostess being Mr. and Mrs. Clarence McMurray of New York. Among those entertained were Mr. and Mrs. James Greene of Washington, Mrs. Sidney DeKay, Mrs. William R. Nelson, Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Enis.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. M. Rehn, Jr., who are spending the summer at the "Sea Reaches," left Sunday for Kennebunk Port, Me., for a week's visit.

Mrs. Marshall Field, who is spending the season at Hotel Oceanside, entertained her niece, Mrs. Albert J. Beveridge, at dinner during the week. Mrs. Field makes her winter home in Washington.

One of the most attractive gardens in Magnolia is that of Mr. and Mrs. Costello C. Converse of Boston. The past few weeks the garden has been constantly admired for its wealth of rambler roses, which hang in profusion along the stone wall.

Mr. and Mrs. William Chaplin of Sewickley, Penn., who are occupying the Curry cottage on Norman's Woe road, have had as their guests the past few weeks relatives of Mr. Chaplin's.

Mrs. Laura Curry Esterbrook of Syracuse, N. Y., and children are expected for the month of August.

Frequently seen on the beach enjoying a morning dip are Robert Flack of Troy, N. Y., and his fiance, Miss Lysbeth Bunker of Yonkers, guests at Hotel Oceanside.

The Rev. and Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenohl of Washington, D. C., who are spending another season in the Ayers cottage on Lexington avenue, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Squam Rock road, Annisquam, the past week.

Signor and Mrs. Gustavo di Rosa and small son are the guests of Mrs. di Rosa's mother, Mrs. William H. Scudder, of St. Louis.

Signor di Rosa has recently returned from Italy, where he was called on business.

Miss Mary C. Thornton, who is occupying "The New House" on Magnolia avenue for the season has as her guest for August Mrs. T. M. Elwell.

Greatly missed from the Oceanside group of young people this season is Miss Eleanor Wheeler, daughter of Mrs. Charles Y. Wheeler of Washington. Miss Wheeler is spending the season at Watch Hill, R. I.

Holden P. Williams, who with his family is spending the summer at Annisquam, was the recent guest of his mother, Mrs. Robert B. Williams, at her Magnolia avenue residence.

The small daughter of Stillman Williams paid a short visit to her grandmother the past week.

Richard Fay Warner was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Warner, at Hotel Oceanside over the week-end.

Walter Williamson of Quincy, Ill., will join Mrs. Williamson at the Adams cottage on Lexington avenue for the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Muller of Baltimore are among the seasons newcomers at Hotel Oceanside.

EASTERN POINT

ALL Eastern Point is interested in the Fair which will take place shortly on the grounds of Hawthorne Inn for the benefit of Stage Fort Park. The Fair, which is an annual one and greatly looked forward to by Eastern Point residents is under the direction of Mrs. Alice Fisher Harcourt of Hawthorne Inn.

Officers from the Mine Force Fleet made the dance at Hawthorne Inn Casino Wednesday evening a bit gayer than usual. Sewall's orchestra furnished the music as usual, and everyone who flittered by in gowns of most becoming shades seemed to be having an enjoyable time.

Bishops and Mrs. Rhinelander of Pennsylvania, who are occupying the Sinkled cottage on Eastern Point were among those present to meet Dr. William A. Bartlett, state director of the Near East Relief, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French at Annisquam on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Spencer Haskell of Worcester are spending the season at Hawthorne Inn.

Miss Lotta Crabtree, who spends her winters at Hotel Brewster, Boston, is again occupying Pilgrim House at Rocky Neck. Other Bostonians summering in this vicinity include Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Parmenter and daughter, Miss Priscilla Parmenter of 95 Mt. Vernon street, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stewart of 4 Louisburg square and Mr. and Mrs. Howland Twombley of Beacon street.

Ensign Joseph C. Van Cleve of the U. S. S. Murray No. 97, who has been in Gloucester since the middle of June, will leave the first of the week for his home in Omaha, for a month's leave. This is Ensign Van Cleve's third season at Gloucester and he already feels like a permanent summer resident.

Mrs. Julia Fisher Harcourt, who is spending the season at Hawthorne Inn, makes a most attractive hostess at the Casino dances.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Jones and family of 5531 Mission Drive, Kansas City arrived in June for the season at their fine estate on the Eastern Point boulevard "Moormere." With them is their son, Van Leer Jones, a student at Northwestern university.

The open meeting of the College club at the home of Mrs. Isaac Patch on Eastern Point road was an event of the week, attended by more than a hundred guests. A picnic supper was enjoyed on the terrace facing Norman's Woe, and reminiscences from the representatives of more than forty

BASS ROCKS

THE present season shows more social activity than any since the war. While there will be no golf or tennis tournaments of consequence—at least none have been announced to date, both the links and tennis courts are patronized in larger volume than for some years. This season the North Shore tennis tournament will be held at the Tedesco club, Swampscott, and roads tennisward will point up the shore.

Similarly the ladies are entertaining on a larger scale than formerly. Last Friday Mrs. McCord of New York entertained 36 at tea. Monday Mrs. Ring entertained a party of 12. Tuesday, Mrs. Miles of Boston had five tables of bridge and tea. On the same day Mrs. Allan Farmer entertained 24 at tea. Mrs. R. M. Cook of Kansas City gave a bridge of three tables, and had 18 for tea. Mrs. Frederick Boyce had six at tea Sunday.

Monday, Miss Betty Collamore had five tables of bridge and 30 for tea. Tuesday, Mrs. Bidwell of the Moorland had six tables of bridge and 24 for tea, and on Wednesday she had three tables at bridge and 14 for tea. Thursday, the entertainment committee of the Ladies club, Mrs. Arthur Mitton chairman, gave a bridge which proved one of the large affairs of the season. Yesterday Mrs. Howard W. Brown of Boston had five tables of bridge and 35 for tea.

The Ladies two-ball foursome tournament, Tuesday, was won by Miss Mary Hart and Mrs. Walter Carl.

The Saturday night dances continue to attract large numbers and are among the most enjoyable that the club has given for many seasons.

Mrs. Arthur D. Chandler of Orange, N. J., and Miss Emily Waelder of New York are the house guests of the E. B. Chandlers at "Casa del Mar."

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Drake of Chicago came several weeks ago to their residence at Grapevine cove.

C. F. Farnsworth and family of Memphis are spending the season at "Seaways," their summer home.

C. H. Gamage and family of Gloucester are established for the season in the summer cottage at Grapevine cove.

Mrs. D'Arcy Paul of Baltimore is occupying the Selden cottage in Briar Road.

The Alexander C. Nelsons of Ruxton, Md., came early in the season to their cottage, Briar Road.

ANNISQUAM

EVERY interesting talk was given by Dr. William A. Bartlett, state director of the Near East Relief at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Boston, Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Bartlett emphasized the responsibility of the people of the United States towards this helpless and greatly wronged race which despite the years of serfdom and massacres have survived through the ages. The Armenian people, dwellers of our Holy Land are deserving of a better fate than the cruel Turk allows.

Mrs. Grafton Abbot of Winchester, who with her five small children is spending her second season at Annisquam, was the guest of Miss Elizabeth Miner at Hawthorne Inn, the past week.

Miss Miner was a classmate of Mrs. Abbot at Smith college.

Mr. Alden French, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Annisquam left the latter part of the week for a fortnight's fishing trip on board a Gloucester vessel. The younger son, Hollis S., is in Labrador where he is with Dr. Grenfell's mission.

Very quaint and most attractive is the rock bound garden of Deaconess Goodwin on the banks of Squam river.

Annisquam may well be called a "garden town" and lovers of "old fashioned gardens"—where the hollyhock and primrose abound, will be given a rare treat.

Arrivals at Wonasquam Lodge: Mrs. Walter A. Draper and Miss Lucy Draper, Cincinnati; Mrs. C. S. Robertson, Miss Mary Robertson, Miss Jean Robertson, Miss Olive Jameson, Mrs. G. L. Whiton, Mrs. L. Joslyn Rogers, Joslyn Rogers, Jr., Toronto; Miss Alice Miller and Miss Theresa Miller, Cambridge; Mrs. N. Harris, Roxbury; Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Beck, Frederick Beck and Phyllis Beck, Buffalo; Miss Sabina Kelly, Dorchester; Mrs. M. B. Emmons, Mrs. Marshall Johnson, Miss Ethylen Johnson, Atlanta; F. A. Edwards and Miss Betty Edwards, New York; Mrs. Dana Avery Barnes, Edward Barnes, Dana Barnes and Mrs. Susan L. Maguire, Syracuse; Mrs. Katherine Daily, Louise M. Daily, Roxbury; Margaret Kelly, Boston; Josephine Noble, Mrs. H. O. Mathewson, Milford, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Naylor, Springfield; Miss Ethel Avlidge Bruce, Malden; Dr. Henry A. colleges made the evening pass all too quickly.

Ambassador Ira Nelson Morris, who is summering at "Eaglehead," the Manchester estate of the late Senator McWilliam, was the honor guest and gave an informal talk on colleges and universities in Sweden.

Among those present were Harris Hammond, Miss Constance Morris, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Woodbury, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Patch, Miss Helen Patch, Edward Vassar Ambler, T. H. Haines, Miss Madge Haskell, Miss Mary Chamberlain, Miss Mary Short, Miss Nancy Flagg, Mr. and Mrs. Shute, Miss Carrie E. Parsons, Mrs. Grafton Abbott, Miss Alling, Mrs. Sargent, the Misses Dakin, Wahlon Hartley, M. Griffith Roberts and Miss Priscilla Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Drake of the Blackstone, Chicago, have been entertaining Mr. Drake's sister, Miss Helen Drake, of Chicago. The Misses Elizabeth and Katherine Drake were recent guests of their aunt, Mrs. Harry Farnum, at the "Sun Dial" cottage on Shore road, Magnolia.

Miss Dorothy Eastman of Chicago is a guest at the Drake residence.

Among the most attractive of the younger set on Eastern Point is Miss Isabelle Fishburn, daughter of Mrs. Louise Giffen Fishburn, who is spending the summer with her grandmother, Mrs. James F. Giffen, on Eastern Point road.

Miss Fishburn, whose winter home is in Baltimore, was a popular debutante a few seasons ago.

The artist colony at Eastern Point again numbers prominent artists in its midst, among them being Louis Kronberg of Boston, Hugh Breckenridge of Philadelphia, Mrs. Fern I. Coppidge of Philadelphia, Hayley Lever of New York city, Miss Ruth W. Holleck of the National Arts club, N. Y., and Felicie Waldo Howell of New York city.

Miss Katherine Pollard, daughter of Mrs. Alonzo Wilder Pollard of Boston and Eastern Point, who recently returned from Dr. Wilfred Grenfell's mission in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, is planning a sale of rugs and mats for the benefit of these isolated and often destitute fisher folk of the north.

Recent guests at "Sea Rocks," Grape Vine Cove, the Eastern Point residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob L. Loose of Kansas City, included Mr. and Mrs. John Clay of "Finisterre."

The Arthur G. Leonards of Chicago came early to their stone chateau, which was hastened to completion last season. While the house in the interior is practically completed, there is still some work to be done on the grounds before the entire building scheme is finished.

Commodore and Mrs. John Greenough of New York are again domiciled in their cottage on Eastern point boulevard.

C. R. Hinchman and family of Philadelphia have arrived at "The Willows" for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Gillette of New York are at their summer home on Grapevine road.

Seth K. Ames and family of Melrose are again occupying "Sunset Rock" cottage.

Mrs. Waterman A. Taft and family of Arlington opened "Balmaha" in June.

Philip M. Tucker and family of Brookline are again occupying their summer home, "The Outlook."

The William Sheafes of Boston are at their Eastern Point summer house.

The Stephen W. Sleepers of Boston came early to their house on Eastern Point road.

W. Jay Little and family of Boston are established for the season at their Eastern Point residence.

Miss Mary E. Doyle of Detroit has the Scott house in Tragabigzanda road.

Mrs. Samuel A. Raymond and family and Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Raymond opened "The Ramparts" in June. The place still continues to hold attention as one of the most picturesque on the North Shore. It is within the ramparts or earthworks of Fort Independence, constructed during the Civil war, a battalion of soldiers being quartered there during that period.

Jacob L. Loose and family of Kansas City are at their fine residence, "Sea Rocks," at Grapevine cove.

Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard and family of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, are at their summer house for the season.

MY LADY GOES SHOPPING

Psychic Seventeen

Ma chere Amie:

Here, in quiet Cape Ann, I have had an experience! I was reclining in one of those heavenly Canton chairs, provided by Pattillo of quaint Gloucester, when, all of a sudden, a man appeared in my Adamless Eden of a garden.

He had a beautiful face—like one of those Greek gods that Miss Spout, our myth teacher, used to tell us about, remember?—and he wanted to see father. He was not well dressed, but I knew him at once for a Noble incog!

So I rested my head against a green silk cushion and asked pleasantly, "Have you been in this country long?"

Instantly he gave the impression of needing that sunburn lotion we buy at Wetherell's—shall I send you some, Ev? It's wonderful—and respectfully repeated his request.

I tried to test him more delicately by lightly remarking, "What do you think is the most important thing in life—blue blood, filthy lucre, or clothes?"

He backed away as if he knew that I was hot on his trail, saying hastily, "I'll call when your father is in."

"But which?" I gently persisted.

"Have you more than one?" he exclaimed.

When I repeated my question he rallied, "Oh, clothes!" said my Adonis (was Adonis the one that looked best without clothes? You were always good at myth. Writing is my forte) and he fairly ran out of the room!

I know I am sykick (the spelling doesn't look just right, but I know there is a "y" in it and alas! Mother has hidden the book I have on the subject)—that means so finely nerved that you attract everything without sense, like ghosts and spiritually moved furniture. It is a sort of esoteric sense that enables me to tell a nobleman from a clod of clay and what to do under the circumstances.

A sykick currant ran through me and I knew at once that I must buy fitting raiment before I met my Prince again. It just came to me that I must go alone—Mother is away and my hated chaperone, Miss Smithers, was writing letters—so I stole out, on the highways of the great wide world, absolutely ignorant of how I was to reach the buyways of Magnolia.

Fate is always with the brave (if I were writing about someone else I'd add "and beautiful," but you know how it is) and a man driving a stunning car stopped the moment I raised my hand. I knew I could trust him, because he was so plain, though quite young and rather distinguished looking.

He drove me most carefully to Magnolia, giving me fatherly advice, and suggesting that I make the return trip with him. He made me promise not to speak to any man under forty while shopping. Yes, he drew the whole story of my pilgrimage to Magnolia from me by his firm manner of questioning. He made me think of Lincoln—all but his flawless clothes. Oh, why did Drinkwater (or is it Drinkwine?—he isn't an American writer, you know, and the former sounds so American) in that play the lit. teacher made us read last year elude to Lincoln's careless habits of dress? When I am a famous writer, I shall never disturb an ideal.

Magnolia at last! I felt as one who has escaped from a hairem (you know, Ev, one of those places in Turkey where all the women live together as we do at school, watched over by sleepless younucks—something like our professors, I suppose)—free, penniless but proud—knowing that any store would be glad to charge things to Father—I stepped from the car bent on purchasing purple and fine linen wherewith to dazzle the eyes of my Prince in Disguise.

We stopped at the Oceanside, so, of course, I went to Hill & Bush first, where they have the sheerest, daintiest blouses you ever saw. But there I felt handicapped by my age, because I longed to possess an embroidered gold filet mesh over brown charmeuse, which would be wonderful with my hair, but you know what Mother is.

So I went over to the Little White

Salon and picked out an ingenue organdie, cool and virginal, embroidered in rosebuds—just about Mother's speed—but when I went upstairs to have it fitted I ran into Phyllis Brownell, who was trying on a white Canton crepe, blue figured and trimmed with blue chiffon. She is an artist, therefore she never thought of asking who was with me, but raved on about the design on the dress.

"If you drop a pebble in the water near a bank where rushes grow you will see the inspiration for this design, Marion. Isn't it interesting for a sea shore frock?

No one but a Phyllis would have had the sense to ask my opinion, but I decided it was safer to go at once—only stopping to buy a bewitching sea green chiffon motor veil (to serve as a complimentary color for my hair) and some of that delicious perfume that Slattery's always have in stock.

I hurried right over to Miss Farrell at Lamson & Hubbard's and there was Anne buying a yellow voile "Gasque" blouse, lined with white organdie, little touches of which peeped out engagingly. She examined all the new hand-made French blouses and I thought she would never go.

Miss Farrell is so sympathetic—she hedged me off from Anne, who finally left without having seen me, and then she invited me to tell her why Mother wasn't with me. She seemed to understand everything and said the dresses could be sent on approval. She let me try on a lovely three-piece suit of heavy Canton crepe. The jacket was a cape effect, the color a celestial green and it was embroidered in silky white wool and tiny black and white glass beads. There was also the coolest white crepe dress, all embroidered in crystal beads, with a lovely silver fringe around the large arm holes and the bottom of the skirt. A luscious bunch of frosted silver grapes held the silver ribbon sash in place. I certainly would have shone in that dress!

I don't know just how Miss Farrell did it, but she led me to select a very "girlish" white net and organdie that Mother herself might have chosen for me. I think it was the Roman ribbon sash that I couldn't resist. It's really sweet, but I hate to look so young all the time. Why, Peggy's brother, Jimmy, doesn't know that I am a woman!

Then I went to Manahan's and there sat Peggy trying on the smartest hat—it had lightning zigzags stitched in brown on tan felt. The worst part of summering on Cape Ann is that it abounds in relations and ready-made friends. Of course, Peggy saw me immediately, but she is a good sport and she just acted as if I always went shopping alone. However, she tried to keep me with her—she made me look at Manahan's exquisite assortment of imported thread lace blouses. There are so many varieties, each one prettier than the other, all high necked and so nice under slip-ons—that Peggy did not have to work hard to keep me interested. After that she made me try on a green French cord love of a dress with an overblouse and a round pleated collar. Peggy herself, who likes to look young! bought a rose Irish dimity in the same style. Just then Peggy discovered some heavenly sport suits in stunning colors—mahogany, rust and dark henna. There was one in Burbury brown that was a three-piece suit with walking knickers and skirt and circular cape, which she insisted on trying on, as it was just the thing for tramping or motoring.

That's where I gave Peggy the slip and escaped to McCutcheon's and bought an imported, marvelously embroidered handkerchief—it was only twenty dollars and it is so important to have the right kind of a handkerchief in case one should drop it, you know.

And then I went to Farr's and saw all the new hand-tied belts. I bought twelve different colored ones so as to be sure they would match my sweaters. When Mother returns she is going to let me have enough Farr sweaters, fitted to order, to last the winter, because this is the only place we know where you can be measured and have your sweater woven to fit your individual shape. I did stop to try on one then and there of the new honey-dew shade. It was a "peachy" color for my hair!

I wanted to go to Thayer McNeil's, but I was afraid that some one might find me defenceless without my shoes, so I decided to hurry on to my rendezvous (that means, Ev, when a woman of the world meets a man, who isn't related to her, without her family's consent) with my stern protector.

On the way back to the Oceanside, I just peeped into Schmidt's. That place always thrills me, as it has such lovely things in it. He had just got a shipment of Dutch silver. There was one lamb of a tea set in it that I just longed to take back to boarding school with me. Just as I was leaving the store my eye lighted on a set of old English flat wear, made by Richard Crossley and stamped London, 1770. Just imagine all the lovely mouths that silver has helped to feed. You know I have a wonderful imagination—everyone says so!

I found my new escort near the Oceanside. I proposed an ice, but he said, "It's home for yours, without a chaperone," which made me pity him for not being modern.

However, he stopped, as we passed through Gloucester, and bought candy and perfectly scrumptious ice cream cones at Barker's, so we broke the bread of amity. (That last phrase isn't mine—I read it somewhere—Miss Litt, our English teacher, says to strive for truth in my written expression, hence I mention it.)

As we turned in toward home we met Papa (accent last syllable). If I don't take to literature (tragedy, I think I am best fitted for)I know I shall be a movie actress. I affectionately touched Papa's arm with my slim fingers, as I have seen it done at the North Shore Theatre, saying, "Oh, Daddy, this is the brother of a dear schoolmate of mine—Mr.——I had to cough—I didn't know his name!

"Harry Vandervelt," growled my honest friend.

Papa beamed. "Harry J. Vander-

John Mussen and family of Lowell are occupying one of the two summer cottages which he erected during the spring at the corner of Eden road and South street.

Miss Helen Chamberlain of Brookline has acquired the old colonial residence, 4 King street, for a year round residence. The house fronts the Front beach and has some fine old inter or woodwork.

The Herman T. Spains of Boston, who occupied the Charles Nelson cottage on the Headlands last summer, have already returned to the same cottage for a long season.

The H. Smiths of Boston, who occupied Howard Hodgkins' residence last summer, have returned again and are domiciled in the same place, Mr. Hodgkins' family having gone to their camp on Bearskin Neck.

J. F. Reynolds of Boston is at his summer home on Flat point for the season. Mr. Reynolds was the pioneer for the Flat point section of this summer territory.

The Blunt property on the Headlands has been taken for the season by Miss Julia Coburn of Concord, who has been at Marmion Way for several seasons.

The Mary F. Smith dwelling on Main street will be occupied by Mrs. Fred Thompson of Somerville, who has been coming to town for years.

velt's son?" he asked. "I met your father today at Hornblower & Weeks'."

Unworldly as I am I know it is a name to respect in finance (a refined term for business with real money in it) and I regretted that he had come too late into my life.

They shook hands. Papa asked him to call. I shook my head, knowing that I was reserved for one only, but Papa made him stay to tea.

A new man assisted Dents, our butler, to bring out the tea things—it was Adonis!

I could hardly breathe—I was betrayed—the tea was iced, but no colder than my heart.

When the youth disappeared, I said carelessly to Father, "Who is that clumsy creature?"

Papa laughed (I shuddered.) "Don't be so critical, Polly"—he still uses that repulsive nickname—"He's young and Dents will break him in. He is very handsome around in livery and he is the only son of my dear old nurse——"

Papa doddered on, but I did not hear him.

I turned to my protector, "Will you come to see me again?" I murmured.

"Sure thing!" he responded. "Play tennis tomorrow?"

I nodded. After all he looks what he is and his clothes are equal to the "Well Dressed Man" in Vanity Fair. Perhaps, someone will appreciate my efforts to express my personality in dress.

Je t'aime,

Marianne.

P. S.—On second thought I think I shall have this published and send you a copy of THE CAPE ANN SHORE. I have no secrets from my public—great writers never have, see the French, or the Russians. My family may object, but that is the tragedy of youth—to be unable to educate one's parents to the broader outlook on life.

Four Classes Sail Hotly Contested Races

A light baffling wind and a smooth sea with clear sky overhead prevailed in the race of the Annisquam Yacht club Saturday afternoon. There was another large turnout, 32 yachts competing, the fishes leading with 18 boats starting. The wind was south at the start, backing easterly and then hauling to the southwest. In the Bird class the course was a run down the river then a reach to the Essex buoy, a reach across to the outer mark with a beat home.

The Tern and Mavis led on the way out, with the Jay third. At the lighthouse, the Mavis was out ahead, with the Chickadee second and Tern third. On the reach to the outer mark Mavis still led, rounding 10 seconds ahead of Chicadee, with Tern 30 seconds behind. On the beat home, the Jay, sailed by James Cunningham, went up into first place and was first at the lighthouse. After the lighthouse was passed it became a seesaw game, Mavis again going into first place with the Tern second. Coming up the river a strong outgoing tide was encountered, which set the boats back. Mavis retained her lead to the end, with the Jay second.

In the Cat class, knowledge of the wind and tidal conditions undoubtedly contributed to the win for Capt. Jelly in the Catnip. The course in this class was a broad reach to Plum Cove, a reach across and a beat home.

No. 6, a new boat, got the benefit of the start and with the Catnip took the Squam side of the river, the others taking the West Parish shore. The two on the Squam side guessed right and got a puff of wind which virtually won the race right there, and when they got out of the river to the lighthouse had established a big lead. The Catnip, being a boat's length behind No. 6, the race then became a tussle between the two for the leadership.

Going to Plum Cove, Capt. Jelly luffed up under the shore, which proved another good move, getting a strengthening breeze which lifted him well into the lead. the boat turning three minutes ahead of No. 6. On the reach across to the outer mark there was no change.

On the beat home the Catenary passed No. 6 into second place. Catnip, No. 6, Catenary and Copycat going over to port on the beach shore, the others making a long hitch inshore to starboard. Coming up the river the boats bucked the strong tide, but the skippers of the Catnip and Catenary picked out the route of least resistance and finished 20 minutes ahead of the field.

Three of the T-boats sailed the regular triangular course in the Bay, Commodore Wiggin winning in the Hurrah.

Eighteen of the Fish class got away, Sanddab winning more than nine minutes ahead of the Herring, the second boat. The summary:

Sunday afternoon's race of the Annisquam Yacht club was sailed in a moderate though fluky southwest breeze and called out a good fleet of starters.

The Bird class sailed a triangular course to Essex, thence to the outer mark, two reaches, and a beat home against a strong opposing tide out of the river.

Honors were easy at the start, most of the boats taking the Squam side of the river, those which took the westerly route gaining thereby, getting to the lighthouse first on the run down, the Chicadee rounding the channel buoy slightly in the van of the field.

On the reach for Essex the fleet divided up, going off wind hunting, the skipper of the Chicadee making a bee line for the buoy and getting there first, with the Albatross 15 seconds behind, the Tern, right on his quarter, being third boat.

On the reach across to the outer mark the Albatross pulled into the lead, rounding the buoy five seconds ahead of the Chicadee, the Tern and Mavis being a half minute astern.

The Mavis stood over to the eastward on the beat home, the majority going off to port to westward. At the channel buoy the Mavis was leading, and Tern a close second.

Beating up the river is a crucial test of sailing and Jack Hooper, who had challenged the Mavis, went into first place at Bar Rock, finishing to the good.

Don Jelly in the Catnip, who has got his boat going strong in recent races, again landed another first, hunting pockets in some of the coves under the bluffs and choosing a spot in the river where the tide is least forceful when bucking against it.

All the cats got away evenly, the course being reaches to Plum Cove and to the inner mark, and a beat home. The Kittiwake was the first to get around Plum Cove buoy, with the Catnip a close second. On the reach to the inner mark, Catnip pulled out ahead and stretched out her lead a half minute.

On the windward work all save Fred Hawkins in the Catchup stood to starboard inshore. Hawkins, who was far behind, took a chance and went off by his lonesome to port, striking it right, being in first place when the fleet bunched up at the lighthouse, the Catnip being a half minute behind. All then tacked for the beach. Capt. Jelly, however, made a tack across the sandbar under the small beach and hit a good breeze, which proved

ROCKAWAY

The Rockaway is running the usual Friday night hops which are very gay with the pretty gowns of the ladies and everyone enters into the spirit of the occasion with enthusiasm.

Card parties are held in the living room every Thursday evening and first prizes were won by Mrs. Du Quesne of Paris and Mrs. Seldon of Detroit.

Summering at the Rockaway are a number of golf enthusiasts. On Wednesday Capt. Lowell and Capt. Fitz of the U. S. Navy and Dr. Vaughan and Prof. Brackett of Boston played a foursome at the Rockport links. Dr. Vaughn had a remarkably low score, so they say, but the captains show the old navy spirit and will not be downed and immediately challenged them for a return battle, which will be fought out in the near future.

Arrivals at the Rockaway: Frank A. Hoops, Boston; Dr. and Mrs. M. E. Gleason, Newton; Mrs. F. M. Turnbull, Cambridge; Elizabeth Smith, Brighton; Mrs. F. H. Kane, Miss I. M. Kane, Somerville; Mrs. W. BEHIND THE SCENES AT THE PLAYHOUSE

Those who were fortunate enough to have seen the first series of plays of the opening program at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors will, we are sure, be interested in a short review of the accomplishments and honors that have come to those taking part in these plays.

Mrs. Louise Closser Hale, who so admirably read the synopsis of Act 1 of Monna Vanna, is both an actress and a writer. Last winter she appeared most successfully in Miss Lulu Bett, which play was very well received in New York. One of her recent books, delighting her readers in both England and America, is "An American's London."

Mrs. Margaret Parsons has played for many seasons for the interested audiences that attend the worth while plays given at the Playhouse. She is always enthusiastically received.

Edward Massey is a Harvard man, and a young author in Prof. Baker's Workshop 47. He is the director of the "Brookline Dramatic club" and last winter staged the "Beggars Opera" in Boston.

Willard Thorpe is another of Prof. Baker's "Class 47."

Hobart Nichols, a well-known New York artist, appreciating the beauties of the Cape Ann Shore, comes here to work every summer.

Carl J. Nordell is an artist of note.

Madeleine Laurent is a gifted young Boston singer and actress.

Reginald Lawrence is the director of the Princeton Dramatic club.

John J. Wolcott is the principal of a school in Lowell, and also an artist.

Dorothy Burnham is well known in Gloucester for her fine work in the Gloucester Community House.

Madeleine Williams comes from New York and does dramatic work under Edith Wynne Mattheson.

Hyatt Mayor, who is well known to the Playhouse audiences each season hails from Princeton. He is the son of Dr. Alfred Mayor, who is connected with the Carnegie Foundation in Brooklyn, and has done celebrated marine research work in the tropics. His aunt is the famous sculptor, Anna Vaughn Hyatt.

Rita Langhorne is a talented young Virginian artist.

Martha Flint comes from the Boston Normal Art School. —C. A. S.

"THE WITCH HOUSE"

ANTIQUARIAN DISCOURSES ON SANDY BAY HOMESTEAD

(Written for The Cape Ann Shore)

By Geo. Ira Tarr

"Almost every place has a haunted house," said the village antiquarian, "and Sandy Bay is no exception." That evening the stories at the grocery shop had to do with superstition, and with haunted houses, ghosts, goblins and other things of like nature, said to have existed in the early days of Sandy Bay.

"The Witch House at the Cove always fascinated me when a boy," he began, "for there was something about it that satisfied my imagination. The old women's yarns and the queer stories repeated by the village folks made it doubly interesting to me—so much so that I visited the house whenever possible. It had been built in my grandfather's time, and the folks always considered it a building of some consequence at the time it was built. Situated in one of the most beautiful parts of our village, it overlooks the ocean, the breezy headlands, and a portion of the harbor. Standing back from the dusty highways, it is certainly picturesque, with its narrow winding gravelled avenue, lined with tall elms that tell by their grandeur how long the mansion must have been built.

"I always enjoyed the spacious grounds, which are enclosed by grey stone walls, the scattering pear, apple and plum trees having almost outlived their usefulness. When I was a boy, years ago, the gardens always appealed to me; these were always well-kept, the small fruits and vegetables were of a superior quality, and the flower garden was gay with Canterbury bells, lilies of the valley, marigolds, foxglove, heliotrope, English violets and the other old-fashioned flowers not common in our gardens today. They were watered from a small and pretty lake half surrounded by leaning willow trees, which is called the Silver Lake, which makes a pretty picture when it reflects the shadow of the old mansion. The tradition is that in the large grove of oak trees not far from the lake, the celebrated Indian chief, Quioubamenac, and his tribe held numerous councils.

"I never could walk through that grove of stately oak trees with my soul unmoved. I would recall the Indian maids that danced with flower and song through the grove hill spaces, and I always thought that if the three egg-shaped color stones in the center of the grove could speak, what wonderful stories they might tell of a time before the Indian or white man inhabited the shores of Sandy Bay. These stones are in every way different from other granite found in that locality, and their silence without record makes them impressive,

REFLECTIONS

By NATALIE HAYS HAMMOND

A traveller met a Manchu woman, in Hong Kong.
He thought he saw in her eyes,
The golden light of the tropics.
So he married her.

He brought her to the grime-smeared cities of our East,
And, when he saw her in his up-town flat,
He was angry, for there were no golden lights in her eyes.

"UNFINISHED"

Thru a narrow window of my studio,
Like a Japanese panel picture,
I see the dog-day sun go down,
Like a red ball dropping Behind the black branch of a cedar Into the cool, gray water.
Drop slowly, little red sun!
And I will write a little song
While you are setting:—
"I would write a song of old Japan On Cape Ann.——"
But the sun is gone!
My Japanese print is spoilt—
My song is forever unfinished!

—Louie Rogers Stanwood.

PLAYHOUSE NOTES

Last Friday a clambake on the rocks at Eastern Point was organized by Miss Dorothy Burnham for the cast of the plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors. In spite of the heavy rain nearly all the actors came. Among those present were Mrs. William Atwood, Miss Florence Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Massey, Madame Cecile Talma, Miss Louisette Talma, Antonio de Mesquita, Mr. and Mrs. Carl J. Nordell, Mr. Crosby, Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Nichols, Miss Madeleine Williams and her mother, Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Louise Closser Hale was also there and enjoyed her first clambake.

Reginald Lawrence, who designed the scenery for "Monna Vanna" and "The Doctor in Spite of Himself" at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors, left Thursday for his New York state farm. He expects to return here in time to do the scenery for the next group of plays, August 25, 26, 29, 30, 31.

Last Saturday a demonstration lesson of Dalcroze Eurythmics was held at the Community Dramatic school as their weekly entertainment. These exercises were originated in Switzerland by

Crystal Wings

By HERBERT BRAASCH
University of Utah, '19, Harvard, '22

Fluffy, bouyant snow flake
So like eider down
How you do delight me
See your ermine gown!

Not a thousand goldsmiths
Plying finest tools,
Could approach in beauty
Your flashy robe of jewels.

From imposing storm clouds
You lightly steal away,
Drifting, piling, shifting
In your merry play.

When I try to catch you
Dainty fashioned fern
To a tiny tear drop
Magic-like you turn.

KITCHEN SHOWER PARTY

A most enjoyable occasion was the kitchen shower party given recently at "Green Gables," the summer residence of Mr. and Mrs. Howard F. Smith, at Riverview, Annisquam river, in honor of the Misses Blanche and Margaret Davis, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Davis.

The engagement of Miss Margaret Davis to Malcolm H. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard F. Smith, was recently announced, as was that of Miss Blanche Davis to Joseph Boyer, an attorney of Jacksonville. Fla., and a nephew of Mrs. Harriet Patch of Eastern Point road.

There were present 26 of the relatives of the young people and the evening was passed in the various pleasing diversions incident to an occasion of this kind, the young couples receiving the felicitations of all on their contemplated entry into the matrimonial ranks.

MISS VIRGINIA WAINWRIGHT

Miss Virginia Wainwright had a successful concert last Tuesday afternoon in the Manchester Town hall. Joseph J. Gilbert, flutist, played half the program and Mrs. Clara Leavitt sang the other half.

The words and music of one of the songs, "Snowfall in the Cathedral Pines," sung by Mrs. Leavitt, were written by Miss Wainwright. Miss Alice G. Lenk played the accompaniments. Mrs. Leavitt wore a pink gown and Miss Lenk was dressed in blue and white.

Miss Wainwright will have an entertainment at Hotel Rockmere, Marblehead, Wednesday evening, August 10, at 8.15, in addition to her regular set of three musicals at Manchester and Beverly Farms.

On August 10, Miss Wainwright will give a reading of humorous poems and short stories from classical and modern authors. Miss Lenk will play piano solos by classical and modern composers.

COL. NELSON HONORED

A portrait of William Rockhill Nelson, founder of the Kansas City Star, was hung in the Western Gallery of Art at the Public Library, Kansas City, July 26. The picture is the gift of Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. Kirkwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson. Mr. Nelson founded the art gallery.

Col. Nelson, who made Magnolia his summer home and was a prominent figure on the North Shore, died several years ago. His schooner yacht, Hoosier, modeled after a Gloucester fisherman, was the largest yacht enrolled in the Eastern Yacht club.

He built the fine residence in Lobster lane, Magnolia, now occupied by Mrs. Nelson and her daughter.

Mrs. Henry Clay Frick and two of her grandchildren, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Childs Frick, have arrived at Eagle Rock, Pride's Crossing. Miss Helen Clary Frick, who recently returned from Europe with her mother, is visiting friends in Greenwich, Conn., prior to coming to Prides.

A country fair is to be given on August 17 at the Hawthorne Inn lawns in Gloucester for the benefit of the Parkway fund at Gloucester. Mrs. William K. Harcourt of New York is chairman of the committee in charge.

"THE WITCH HOUSE"

carrying the mind back into the shadows of conjectured history. With one exception, they have stood useless for centuries; they have served as a meeting-place for the children of the neighborhood, where corn and baked potatoes were devoured with sharkish appetites in those happy days of my boyhood.

"The architecture of the Witch House would not be considered the finest specimen of Colonial style, but it emphasizes the antiquity of the house itself. The fragrant lilac bush almost covers the bay window, built so quaintly with numerous diamond-shaped panes of glass, and the honeysuckle creeps and clings over the front door, venturing to the eaves, where the swallows annually build their mud nests and rear their young unmolested. The original house consisted of two wings, but additions have been made from time to time, until today it reminds me of the 'House of Seven Gables'.

"Everything pertaining to the house had been made by hand, and the nails and door latches had been forged upon the premises. The hand-hewn timbers are in a perfect state of preservation; the wide boarding and weather-stained shingles and clapboards were made from white pine, and the building has withstood the ravages of time and the fury of the New England elements.

"A half-worn horse shoe has been for years nailed over the kitchen door. It was thought to bring good luck, and the hornet's nest built in the top of the well-curb was sure to bring great prosperity. Methinks I can see old 'Dorcas,' the devoted servant who spent her life at the Witch House. She could give a circumstantial description in detail of everything pertaining to the house for a period of sixty years. She was old and deeply wrinkled, and had grey hair and a rounded back, while her right eye was defective. They say that in her prime she was considered very handsome, with smiling, glad blue eyes and a wealth of chestnut hair, much praised by her many admirers. Faithful she lived and died, waiting for her first and only lover, the sailor boy who never returned from sea. As she went about her work, she often hummed a chantey:

'By day or night, in weal or woe,
My heart no longer free,
Must bear the love it cannot show,
And silent wait for thee.'

Dorcas welcomed heartily all visitors to the house, and the children of the neighborhood made her many calls, to be treated with a piece of delicious ginger cake which they eagerly devoured, even if it was a little burned on the bottom.

"She usually served these tempting refreshments in the spacious dining-room upon an immense, much worn oak table, said to have been made by the first owners of the house. The small windows and panes, the dingy smoked walls and ceiling, with their hand-hewn beams, the great brick fireplace, with crane and cast iron kettle, and the sanded floor were all interesting and attractive. The flavor of the tea that was served required an acquired taste to appreciate. Sometimes it was sweetened with molasses, but usually with brown sugar. In the dining room large fires roared up the chimney and the family gathered here in the winter time, telling stories and singing songs, an old-fashioned New England amusement of the fireside. The stories usually pertained to superstition, very prevalent when I was a boy, and lurked in everyone's mind. Fishermen believe in witches and dreams, signs and omens, but they were no more credulous than the thirfty housewives. All were well stocked with superstition, and listened with grave attention to every new tale. I do not care to repeat any of these thread-bare stories that thrilled the minds of the children and caused them to suffer agony, as they are fast fading away, and will soon be forgotten. Dorcas and her masters, whom she had loved and served faithfully, are at last equal, for all sleep in the village burying ground.

"The front hall of the Witch House is not large, but wainscoted and panelled in white oak; the balustrade of mahogany is artistically carved and, like the several mantel pieces, was made in England and brought to this country. The chambers are large, but low-studded. The front chamber facing the highway has always been considered the best, and known as the 'haunted room.' For many years it was occupied by an invalid lady, the daughter of the first owners and builders of the Witch House, and since her death the room had seldom been used, because every person that slept in it for a night always related the next morning many strange and startling stories as to what they had seen or heard. Dorcas listened and remembered many stories, and for a small sum of money would relate them, if her hearers promised not to repeat.

"A young lady, a friend of the second owners of the Witch House, came to make a short visit. She had never heard the local gossip connected with the house, especially the stories pertaining to the front chamber. She was a beautiful girl, about twenty-five years of age, slender and delicate, with melancholy blue eyes, and was the daughter of a Salem ship owner, who had brought her up with the fondest indulgence. She had been anxious to get a touch of country life and, if possible, to regain her health.

"Upon entering the front chamber of the Witch House for the night, she appeared delighted with its cheerful appearance. Everything appealed to her fancy. The antique furniture, the four-posted bedstead and its canopied muslin curtains; plump feather bed and bolster, the hand-made patchwork quilt, the hand hooked and braided mats, all of the appointments in the room made it inviting. When she bade Dorcas good-night, she assured her that the comforts were so complete that there was no doubt that, tired as she was, she would enjoy a good night's sleep.

"Alone in the room, she was attracted by the portrait of a middle-aged woman, finely executed by an artist prominent in his time. As she gazed upon it, it seemed to her that the woman in the portrait wanted to speak to her, and while disrobing she continued occasionally to cast her eyes upon it, wondering whom the portrait represented. Blowing out the tallow candle, she went to the window and partly opened it, for better ventilation. It was a beautiful moonlight night, a gentle breeze came in from the ocean, and leaning upon the window sill she looked out upon the tall elm trees casting their shadows over the lawn, watched the lights in the fishermen's cottages disappear one by one, and listened intently to the sound of a flute that could be heard far away.

"The continuous roar of the ocean, and the moonlight in its silent majesty, made a drowsy feeling steal over her eyes, and after repeating a prayer, she sought her bed and was soon asleep. Nothing disturbed her slumber until early morning, when she was awakened by a flock of noisy geese feeding upon the lawn near the chamber window.

"The rays of the morning sun shining through the window illuminated the room and made the portrait appear to good advantage as she sat up in bed. It fascinated her. Hearing the farm laborers shouting to the cattle and preparing to leave for a day's work in the fields, and thinking it was near breakfast time she dressed, entered the hallway, and descended to the comfortable dining room,

TO MY LADY IN SEARCH OF THE DISTINCTIVE

A SHORT, SMOOTH MOTOR TRIP TO THE SHOPS OF

MAGNOLIA

The Saturday evening hop at Hotel Oceanside was by far the most attractive of this year's series. The excellent music and perfect floor make dancing among the most coveted pleasures at this well-known hostelry.

Among those noted on the floor were Mrs. Sidney Ruggles Small, Detroit; Miss Elizabeth Scudder, St. Louis; Miss Helene Elsworth, South Bend, Ind.; Miss Helen Hussey, St. Louis; Miss Betty Walker, Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hayes, East Orange, N. J.; Miss Marjorie Dakin, Boston; Ensign Joseph C. Van Cleve, U. S. N.; Henry Rowe, Brookline; Fred Elsworth, South Bend; Brooks Reel, New York, and Charles W. Smith.

Mrs. Charles A. Potter of Philadelphia and granddaughter, Dorothy Potter, renewed many acquaintances at Hotel Oceanside on Tuesday, last. Mrs. Potter is spending the summer at Hotel Preston, Beach Bluff.

The North Shore Swimming Pool, situated on Crescent Beach, makes a delightful spot at which to entertain. Among those entertaining at luncheon the past week was Mrs. Arthur Jones of 137 Bay State road, Boston. Covers were laid for six.

Henry L. Rowe, who has been the guest of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Livingston of Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., returned this week to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Prescott Rowe, of Brookline.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hayes and three-year-old daughter, Barbara, will return to East Orange, N. J., by water on Sunday from a two weeks' visit with Mrs. Hayes' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Smith, of Germantown, Pa.

Magnolia was represented at the Army and Navy Festival held recently on the Pingree estate at Wenham by Mrs. Howard Heinz of Pittsburgh, a season guest at Hotel Oceanside. Mrs. Heinz had charge of the flower booth. Assisting her were Miss Lila Lancashire, Mrs. E. Lawrence White, the Misses Mabel and Harriet Rantoul, Miss Jean Sears and Miss Priscilla Rhodes.

The many friends of Mrs. G. L. Buckley and her son, B. Lord Buckley, will be glad to know of their safe arrival at the Yellowstone National Park two weeks ago. Mrs. Buckley and her son left New York city the latter part of June in their Buick touring car and completed their trip of three thousand miles through New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana and northwestern Wyoming without a mishap. After a three weeks' visit at the National Park, Mr. Buckley and his mother will start for New York via Denver and a more southerly route. The Buckleys are well known at Magnolia, having spent many summers at Hotel Aborn.

"Magpie," the attractive launch of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Smith of Germantown, Pa., after a fresh coat of paint and other minor alterations, is once more anchored in the harbor.

EASTERN POINT

MIDGET, owned by Frederick G. Hall of Boston, was the winner in Saturday's races. The boat, which was built last spring, is of the knockabout class and completed the four-mile course in one hour and six minutes.

Mrs. William B. Hill of Baltimore is spending another season at Hawthorne Inn. The death of Mrs. Hill's daughter-in-law, Mrs. Harriet Sherburn Hill, occurred the latter part of June. The late Mrs. Hill was well-known on the shore, having had a cottage in Annisquam for a number of seasons.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dunn of East Orange, N. J., are the guests of Mrs. Dunn's mother, Mrs. K. R. Haass, at Hotel Rockaway. Mrs. Dunn before her marriage was Miss Ruth Haass of Chicago, and with her mother and sister, Miss Margaret Haass, spent a number of summers at the Rockaway. Her marriage to Mr. Dunn occurred in Chicago in the spring.

Bishop Rhinelander will be the speaker at a meeting at the Beverly Farms Baptist church August 21 at 5 o'clock, under the auspices of the Near East Relief of Massachusetts. Hon. Augustus P. Loring of Prides will preside at the meeting.

A bride and groom welcomed to Hotel Rockaway are Mr. and Mrs. Donald Maynard of Worcester. Mr. Maynard has been a guest at Hotel Rockaway for a number of summers and has many friends at the hotel.

George Owens of Wilmington, Del., was a recent guest at Colby Arms', East Gloucester.

Eastern Point residents assisting at the Army and Navy Festival held recently on the Pingree estate at Wenham included Miss Katharine and Priscilla Pollard, daughters of Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard, who had charge of the Grenfell booth.

Mr. and Mrs. John Clay have as house guests at their beautiful home, "Finisterre," Eastern Point, Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Connor, Chicago; Miss Forrest, Dixon, Ill.; George Rice Woods, Portsmouth, and Miss Louise S. Smith, Cheyenne, Wyo. Mr. and Mrs. Clay entertained at dinner recently their guests, with Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Sleeper, Col. A. Piatt Andrew, Mr. Putnam, Davis Greenough of Boston and Mrs. Wilson of Chicago. Softly burning lights, with exquisite shades in pastel colors of pink and blue blended with the lovely vases of flowers which carried out the color scheme of pink and blue. After dinner, bridge and informal music and

A VERY interesting stereopticon lecture was given on Sunday evening in the casino of Hotel Moorland by the Rev. John T. Theodore of the Near East Relief Committee of Massachusetts. Mr. Theodore showed the condition of Armenia after the World war. Through the kindness of the Gloucester Y. W. C. A., whose lantern was used, the lecture was made possible.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bowler of "Twin Light Manor," have as their guest for the remainder of the season Miss Edith Wood of Worcester.

Miss Ruth and Master Alexander Bowler are spending the summer at camp.

Miss Suzanne McFeely of Pittsburgh who, with her mother, Mrs. John F. McFeely, is spending the season at the Moorland, recently entertained Miss Betty Walker of Detroit.

The Rev. John McGaw Foster of the Church of the Messiah, Boston, who has a summer home on Atlantic road, is again conducting the Episcopal services on Sunday morning at Hawthorne Inn Casino.

The August meeting of the Gloucester College Club will be held at "Twin Light Manor," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bowler of Worcester.

Francis A. Brewer and family of Brookline are in their cottage, corner of Briar and Souther Roads.

Dr. and Mrs. Lawton S. Brooks of Springfield came early in the month to their Atlantic Road summer home.

Dr. Arthur N. Broughton and family of Jamaica Plain are in their cottage, Way Road.

Mrs. C. H. Brown of Brookline has the Hall cottage for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Weston Bull of Springfield have a cottage on Atlantic Road.

Mr. and Mrs. James Carey of Baltimore are in their Beach Road cottage.

WHO'S WHO!

"Who's Who Along the North Shore" for 1921 has just come to hand bigger, brighter and more valuable than ever. It contains a complete list of names of the summer colony all along the shore carefully compiled together with much added information which makes it of value to the summer colony and those who have to do with them. It is neatly printed, finely illustrated and is an authority in its special field. To be had of its publishers, "Who's Who!" Manchester, Mass. Price $3.50. Sent postpaid.

ANNISQUAM

YACHTING continues to engross attention and the interest in the sport grows keener as the season progresses. Jack Hooper in the Bird class is making a great try for the championship in the class this season.

Robert H. Richards and family of Wilmington, Del., are this season occupying "The Pines" at Annisquam. The children of the family are Miss Jane, Charles and Robert, and they are enthusiastic yachtsmen, taking part in all the races of the Annisquam club. Charles will enter Yale this fall and Robert is a student at the Taft School in Connecticut.

Dr. Arthur C. Jelly of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Jelly at their Norwood's Heights summer home.

Wonasquam Lodge is well patronized, as usual, this season. The guests are enjoying the excellent bathing beach and the numerous launch and fishing trips. On the fishing trip Monday, Miss Phyllis Beck caught the largest fish.

One of the most popular boat rides is through the Annisquam river to Gloucester harbor, and when not too rough, the ocean trip around Cape Ann, returning by way of the harbor and Squam river is one of the longest and best.

Mrs. R. G. Tolmie of Montreal gave a lobster dinner to some of her friends, who are guests at the Lodge.

Mrs. Walter A. Draper of Cincinnati, who is also a guest at the Lodge, entertained a number of her friends with a few vocal selections in the music room, which was enjoyed by those present.

UP THE COUNTY

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wheatland, with their three daughters and two sons, have gone from their country home at Topsfield to remain in Europe for the remainder of the summer. The Wheatlands will stop first at Scotland.

Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney of New York, who have rented the Cochrane cottage at Pride's Crossing, have arrived there for the summer. Early in the season the cottage was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Sears, who are at Dark Harbor until September, when they will return and occupy their town house at 232 Beacon street for the winter.

dancing afforded a most delightful evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Clay entertained at dinner Saturday night the members of their house party and Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard and Wilder Pollard of Boston.

Mrs. Jacob L. Loose gave a luncheon Tuesday at her residence, "Sea Rocks," in honor of Mrs. Theodora Noyes of Washington, who is spending the summer at Bass Rocks. Covers were laid for twelve.

Mrs. Loose has as her guest Mrs. James R. Mann of Washington and Chicago, wife of Representative James R. Mann, one of the foremost leaders in the Republican party.

Henry A. Raymond of Cleveland is the guest of Mrs. S. A. Raymond at "The Ramparts."

Augustus Groos of San Antonio is the guest of the E. B. Chandlers at "Casa del Mar."

Mrs. William Thayer Brown, Jr., of New York city is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Tener, at their residence, "Ardarra," Eastern Point boulevard.

Miss Edith Tener is visiting Mrs. Chester A. Congdon, London road, Duluth, Minn.

Miss Edith Notman has been entertaining at her Eastern Point villa Mrs. Richard Van Voorhis of New York. Mrs. Coburn and Miss Harriet Coburn of Lowell, who have been her guests, have departed for their home in Lowell.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William Beach Olmstead of Pomfret, Conn., opened their summer home near Niles beach early in the season.

The death of Mrs. R. C. Rathbone at Washington removes a well-known figure in the Eastern Point colony. Her summer home was the "Hacienda" and this city, in which she was deeply interested, had no more loyal adherent.

MY LADY GOES SHOPPING

Peggy Meets the Green Eyed Monster

"Peggy's birthday blooms next week," announced Phil to the clan, "and she refuses to suggest a gift—she says I should know her wishes. Peggy only has about sixty whims a minute, so I feel quite at a loss to know which one to gratify. You will have to help me, friends—all intimations gratefully received."

"Let Schmidt & Son do it," said Phyllis, who never loses an opportunity to advertise as their loving friend. "They have a new shipment of Dutch silver on exhibition, which surpasses anything of its kind that one has seen in years. You can't beat the Dutch back to silvery 'normalcy'! I'm not so keen about it as a rule, but the things they show in it are lovely. Also they have on exhibition an old silver center piece, from the Duke of Hamilton collection. It is made by Paul Storr and dated 1809. It is perfectly magnificent—Peggy would love it."

"Do they give you a commission?" murmured Jimmy. "Or is this simply the outcome of the museum habit that you acquired abroad?"

"Mollie was responsible for my visit yesterday," laughed Phyllis, "She asked me to help her select a wedding present for 'Cousin Priscilla Worthington', and we bought a beautiful, hand made, Sheffield plate jardiniere, on receipt of which she'll probably live 'happy ever after'. But to return to Peggy, who heard her express a wish of late?"

"Last week she said she was 'dying' for a natural blue fox scarf that we saw at Lamson & Hubbard's," volunteered Marion.

"I'll have to ask someone to telephone reports to me," exclaimed Phyllis, looking at her watch, "as I am off to New York tomorrow and I must tell Marie what to pack—"

We were all shocked to hear that one whom we had grown to love and trust should speak lightly of leaving (us with Peggy's present unsolved) Cape Ann and skipping, or, more probably, skidding, considering what the weather has been, to New York in the middle of the season, so to speak, but Phyllis, with a twinkle in her eye, apologized and said that it had to do with her Future and that she expected to be back in a day or two.

"Come to think of it," said Chubby solemnly, "I have to go to New York, too! Yes, really—business."

We tried not to smile out loud.

After Phyllis had gone we turned to Jimmy—"Now you're talking!" he responded. "My suggestion is, 'Say it with Gorham's.' We all know that Peggy is intimate with the shops of Magnolia, but if Phyllis were to pick out something at Gorham's there would be small chance of Peggy's having seen it before she receives it."

"'Let'er go, Dumbell!' I never thought of that!" ejaculated Phil. "We'll get her on the 'phone and fix it up before Peggy returns from Aunt Lida's."

Phyllis declared herself willing to shop for Phil if he would sit for her, as she had decided to etch him or sketch him for Peggy.

Phil agreed joyously and right there the trouble began. "You are an angel, Phyllis, and I'll do anything for you," he was fervently declaiming as Peggy quietly entered the room.

"Soft music!" quoth Peggy. "Why the pash-poem to our artist friend?"

As Phil's conscience was as light and as white as Gorton's fish flakes, he answered in a manner that the least jealous of young wives could not fail to recognize as "fishy," "Oh, nothing. Phyllis is—is—is . . ."

"I know she is," said Peggy laughingly, "but, at this rate, what she is going to be to you interests me!"

I hate to record it, but Phil, the war hero and debonair aviator, could only think of flight! He muttered that he had "forgotten something" and bolted!

I think right then and there Peggy and the Green-Eyed Monster met for the first time, for, instead of joking or questioning in her usual vein, she said in a tone that conveyed that the incident was closed, "Anne, dear, you must come up and see the new arrivals! I got a marvelous creation from Manahan's. It is a lovely soft sea green pussywillow crepe, trimmed with a drape of gray beads that hangs straight from the shoulder. And it has a soft crush girdle to match, which ties at the side. Just wait 'till you see it! I bought a hat at Farr's, too—"

"Another sport hat, Peggy?"

"Yes, but, you see, this is different"—pulling it out of its box and putting it on her head at just the proper angle. "Isn't that stiff turned down brim smart with the feathers on one side, running rakishly through crown and brim, straight to the shoulder?"

"But I though you went to Aunt Lida's?" I gasped.

"I did and she went to Farr's with me and bought a Londonesque chenille dress with a hat to match—a delectable gray. According to Aunt Lida, it is every well-groomed woman's duty to buy chenile dresses, because they neither crease nor crush—she sounded Biblical in her praise. By the way, we met Mollie at Farr's. She was having a fitting—it's going to be a creamy, but brilliant, yellow English homespun cape and skirt. You should see the new shipment of homespuns, Anne, wonderful range of colors and patterns," prattled Peggy, as she donned her new suit for my inspection.

It was a perfect fit, and Peggy in knickers is enthralling. When she threw the circular cape over one shoulder and strutted, I couldn't help kissing her and begging her to be sensible.

But Peggy pretended that she had forgotten about Phil and the Green-Eyed Monster and was interested only in new purchases.

"It has a skirt, too, but the knickers loomed large in Aunt Lida's horizon, so she led me straight to McCutcheon's, lest I become unfeminine, and presented me with a peach satin negligee—observe the pure lining and the long pointed sleeves? Picturesque and clinging vine to counteract the knickers, and we wound up by falling for a petticoat!"

Peggy considers that garment a relic of the dark ages, but when I saw the blue crepe de chine with the cunning green crepe circle appliqued on the border which was fringed in the same shade of green, I could understand her change of heart.

"We met Nanette Hansom at McCutcheon's," continued Peggy. "She was lamenting the fact that her five-year-old twins had developed different color schemes. It appeared that the adorable dotted swiss brown with white dots, sash, collar and cuffs of organdie, would be exquisite on Babsy and fatal to Betsy. Fortunately, Betsy was saved by a pale yellow in the same style. It was such a joke. Nan said that she bought all their dresses at McCutcheon's because they carry the daintiest 'hand-mades' for wee maids, and Aunt Lida invited her to lunch on the strength of it, and then Nan raved about motoring out to dine at the Historic Winslow House last week and Aunt Lida invited the twins, too, but when Nan asked to be congratulated on getting her divorce, Aunt Lida remembered a previous engagement! The old darling is so true to type."

"Did you go to Hill & Bush?" I asked. "I hear they have a stunning black and white blazer for me."

"We didn't happen to see it," said Peggy, regretfully, "But we did see their drop stitch sweaters. It was a case of we came, we saw, they conquered—Aunt Lida bought two."

"I wish I had been with you," I remarked. Phyllis (Peggy's straight little nose tried to turn up) says that Thayer McNeil has the loveliest striped sport hose, in white wool and in silk, and I pine to possess them at once, if not sooner!"

"I wish I had known," Peggy sympathized, "as we were there this morning. I just had to have those gray satin slippers. You know, the ones embroidered in lighter gray?"

"You are the most ardent shopper, Peggy," I laughed. "Is there any shop you didn't visit today?"

"Yes," replied Peggy, "because when we were at Slattery's and I had just discovered the ideal sport hat for Aunt Lida—white organdie and black straw braid, my dear, arranged in a

THE ROCKPORT SHORE

The small camp of Lottie Haskins, Broadway, has been taken by George Bailey, a former Rockporter.

The Lane shop, formerly Harris, Dock Square, is occupied this season by C. H. Beals of Westfield.

The Russell property, formerly the Drown property, on King street, has been purchased by Miss Helen Chamberlain of Brookline, who buys for a home. The house is an eight-room one, with beautiful old-time woodwork and two fireplaces.

The Howard bungalow on Marmion Way, has been sold to Henry Chandler of Brookline. This is a modern dwelling of 12 rooms, three baths, five fireplaces, with a two-car garage and beautiful grounds.

The Blunts, who have let their cottage on the Headlands for the summer, will tour through Canada and the western states of the union.

Mr. and Mrs. James E. Harris of Malden are occupying Charles F. Adams' summer place, Land's End.

Misses Elizabeth, Mary and Margaret Thacher of Roxbury, at their summer residence, Land's End, for the season.

Dr. Joseph O'Connor of Worcester has arrived for the season at his summer home.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Peterson of Boston are occupying the Calkins summer home on Cove Hill lane.

Miss Jameson, the well-known artist from Philadelphia, is at her cottage on Cove hill for the season.

The well-known artist and illustrator, Jonas Lie, of New York, has arrived and taken the studio in the rear of Sidney H. Savage's store.

The Seamans estate has been purchased by Heinrich Unverhau, formerly of Marblehead. This is one of the most charming places on the coast. It has been named "The Mansion," and will be open for summer guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Witham and four children have arrived from Boulder, Colo. It is nearly eight years since Mr. Ellis has been here and a warm welcome was accorded him.

Bridge still continues to be the popular pastime at Hotel Oceanside these summer evenings. Among those enjoying this captivating game Saturday evening were Mrs. C. F. McMurray, Mrs. George W. Kittredge, Mrs. Frank Culbert and Mrs. E. M. Binney.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. M. Rehn of New York city, who have been visiting friends at Kennebunkport, returned to Magnolia the latter part of the week.

basket weave; brim faced with organdie and the smartest tailored bow running through a black straw buckle effect—when she discovered the time and remembered that she wanted to stop at the Gloucester National Bank on the way home we just flew. Perhaps that is why I arrived too early."

"Peggy, I was there. It was absolutely nothing. How can you be so foolish!" I remonstrated.

"Will you tell me what it was all about then?" demanded Peggy.

It was my turn to squirm, "No, not just now. I—Phil—will tell you—later."

"Listen, Anne," interrupted Peggy, "I think Phyllis is charming, very charming, very gifted, and fascinating—why shouldn't a mere man agree with me? Mollie says Phyllis is a series of moods plus practicality, and that she has her own studio in New York where she is a law unto herself and her family fear to enter! She has played up very nicely, but how do we know that she isn't boheming behind our backs, so to speak?"

"Bo—what?" I asked.

"Mollie says she calls her studio 'Greater Bohemia' "—

I shook Peggy and left her, but I was worried.

I was still more worried two days later when Phil missed his lunch to meet Phyllis's train and Peggy refused to eat hers!

Phyllis came in to see us that afternoon and Peggy glowered while she talked of her trip to Gorham's.

"It is the most sympathetic and congenial shop—it always provides what your heart desires but can't find elsewhere. I bought a traveling clock for my grandmother, and she said, 'You know, dear, that I do not smoke.' When closed, it really did look exactly like a silver cigarette case—a little smaller and thinner, if anything.

"Few people realize what unusual jewelry Gorham Co. carry. I suppose that it is because somehow one always associates the name with big things like the Jeanne d'Arc of Anna V. Hyatt's that they are casting for Gloucester, or wedding breakfast sets or family silver. Someone bought me a gift there last week that I had never even thought of possessing," and Phyllis blushed!

It was the last straw!—one of those confirmations strong as Holy Writ that Shakespeare mentions—as Peggy instantly thought of Phil's account at Gorham's and the Green-Eyed Monster did the rest.

And on top of that Phil spent all his spare time "sitting" for Phyllis!

Never have I known such a hectic week—Phil wouldn't take Peggy seriously. Peggy cultivated Nanette Hansom and talked about the beauties of divorce. Phyllis acted for all the world as if she were in love! Chubby was heavily suicidal. Verily, the Green-Eyed Monster was monarch of all he surveyed!

And then Peggy's birthday dawned. I went over early and was met by a radiant and repentent Peggy—needless to say, a bewitching combination—who waved an exquisite hand-crocheted Vienese beaded bag, clasp and workmanship proclaiming Gorham, before my astonished eyes. The beads made one think of moonlight, forget-me-nots, and amber, and little black silhouettes of foreign looking people walking serenely around the bag to a narrow blue house aglow with yellow bead lit windows.

"It's the only one of its kind in captivity!" chortled Peggy, "but Gorham can always repair it if necessary. Darling Phyllis picked it out for poor, dear Phil. And look at this!—isn't she a genius?—Phil to the life! The frame came from Gorham's too. Oh, Anne, how could I be such a goose?" and she buried her curls in my new collar.

"Peggy, my own, it was all the Green-Eyed Monster's fault," I comforted her.

"Then," said Peggy, shyly, "it can never happen again, because that monster is as dead as a door nail, and I've sent him to join the other myths!"

ANNISQUAM YACHTING

Last Saturday's Racing Sailed in a Fluky Breeze —Rain Squall Drives Racers Home Sunday Afternoon.

Saturday afternoon's race at Annisquam was sailed in a moderate southeast and fluky breeze, the wind backing to the southward toward the close.

The course was, with the exception of the 15-footers, a leeward and windward one to Essex and return. In the 15-foot class the sail was the regular club triangle in the bay.

The Nisan had the best of the start in the fifteens and got away like a winner. Com. Wiggin got hung up for a couple of minutes by getting in too shoal water at the getaway, but managed to finish in second place. The Nisan lead on the reach to Essex with the Tabasco second boat, a minute behind at the turn. The wind shifted at this point, making the leg to the outer mark a beat, the Tabasco rounding a half minute behind the Nisan. On the beat home Sherburne Wiggin in the Tabasco went into first place, the Nisan dropping to third.

In the Bird class the Mavis and Chickadee were best berthed at the gunfire and led the way to the red spar buoy, but at that point both were overhauled by the Tern, the Auk and Albatross coming up as second and third boats. The Tern rounded the leeward mark first and kept the lead coming into the river, when the fluky wind gave the Auk a lift which put her out ahead, in which position she finished.

In the Cat class the boats got away well bunched, with no especial advantage to any contender, and sailed down the wind to the Essex mark very evenly, the Sea Mew slightly in the lead. It was short hitches on the windward leg and at the Spar buoy the Catenary rounded in the van, with the Catspaw and Catnip closely in order. Capt. Norton in the Catenary retained the lead to the finish, with the Catnip working up into second place.

In the Fish class No. 14, Mr. Hill at the helm, got the advantage at the gunfire, which he retained to the end.

A northwest rain squall, coming up suddenly and hitting the Annisquam fleet, racing Sunday afternoon, as the yachts were nearing the home stretch, sent them home so thick and fast that in the downpour of rain no time could be given out. It will be figured out later.

Some of the fleet doused sail before the squall broke and a few ran ashore and beached. There were no accidents, although most of the crews got a drenching.

The officials ashore, noting the black clouds coming down over Ipswich Bay, sent out the club launch, which picked up and towed in a number of the boats. The race started at 3, with a good stiff southerly wind blowing, the course being down the river and the triangle in the bay, a run to the channel buoy and broad reach to Essex and also to the outer mark and a beat home.

In the Birds the Mavis and Chickadee got away in the lead and held those positions to the outer mark, Auk being third. On the beat home the Mavis and Chickadee fell behind, the Auk and Tern coming up and fighting all the way home for first position.

They had reached Bar rocks when the squall struck. Instead of making the water rougher, the action of the wind against the chop of the incoming tide tended to smooth the sea. Jack Hooper and Russell Smith in the Tern and the Auk, respectively, fought it out despite the elements, Tern winning with Auk second, Albatross third and Squab fourth.

The Merle, Osprey, Chickadee and Coot doused sail outside and were towed in. The Osprey near Plum Cove narrowly escaped going ashore.

In the cat class the Catspaw, sailed by Ralph Hale, won, with Catnip, Donald Jelly, second; Kittiwake, W. Kendall, third, this comprising the field of starters.

In the Fishes the Catfish, sailed by C. L. Norton, Jr., finished first; Tuna, Morrill Wiggin, second; No. 14, Lucius Hill, third; Tomcod, Miss Harriet Stevens, fourth; Dolphin, S. Shelden; Skate, Harry Worcester; Sanddab, A. Morrison; Friday, Miss Dorothy Norton; Ray, Sumner Andrew; Bluefish, Morrill Wiggin; Pike, Douglass Guiler, and Hippocampus, Robert Riley, Jr., crossing the line in the order named.

The Flounder, Harry Guild, and the Perch, Harry Griffin, lowered sail and beached and afterwards were towed home. This class was well inside before the squall broke, and proved a weatherly boat in a rough time.

Two boats got away in the 15-foot class, Commodore Wiggin in the Hurrah and James Cunningham in the Tabasco. The squall hit them in the bay, and they scudded before it under bare poles until they were picked up by the club launch and towed home.

"THE WITCH HOUSE"

where she met old Dorcas, who was an early riser. The corn bannock was already cooked upon the hearth, and a pot of strong tea awaited the members of the household. The old woman's ear was keen for one of her age, and she knew the click of the latch on every door in the house.

" 'Good morning, hope ye slept well last night,' said Dorcas to the young lady in a doubtful manner.

" 'Yes, I did, thank you, and strange to say, it is unusual for me to sleep soundly the first night in a strange bed. I just went to bed and went to sleep, and I'm feeling much refreshed,' said the young lady, tossing her curls and smiling.

" 'Ye're the first one up in the house, but the rest of 'em will be along pretty soon. So try to 'muse yerself until they come,' and so saying, Dorcas went in the direction of t'e kitchen, wondering if the young lady would have a dream or some such thing to tell about at the breakfast table, like all the other guests that had slept for the first time in the front chamber.

"The young lady sought the living room and was about to take up a book to read, when Dorcas made her appearance:

" 'Thought I he'rd ye calling,' said the aged servant.

" 'No, I did not call, but as you are here, I will ask you if you know the name of the lady in the portrait that hangs on the wall of my room.'

" 'Ducky, yes, yes, that is the picter of the da'ter of the first owners of this here house. Arter her folks died, everything here was sold to the ones that own it now, and the picter has always been there. They say her spirit comes back sometimes in the night. Ye didn't see it last night, did ye?'

" 'As I told you, I was not at all disturbed last night.'

" 'Ye are the first one that ever slept sound all night in that room. I'll tell ye sometime, but I've got to get the bacon ready for breakfast, so you'll 'scuse me, as the folks 'll soon be down,' and Dorcas scuffled to the kitchen.

" 'What can the old lady really mean by such remarks?' said the young lady to herself, as she sauntered into the library, and taking a large volume from the bookcase, she was surprised to find a manuscript in fine handwriting, evidently that of a woman. It read as follows:

" 'To any person that is interested in liberty: I was born in Salem, Mass. My ancestors were of that notable body of men and women who made a tempestuous voyage in the ship Mayflower across the Atlantic, landing first at Provincetown and later at Plymouth, Mass. They were known as Christian Brethren, faithful and free-born. They were Englishmen, constrained to forsake their dearest homes, their friends and kindred, and flee to America, where they could obtain shelter from the fury of English bishops. Their characters were strong and marked with great ability to rule, obey and be independent.

'Zion's beauty did upon them shine,
Cotton Mather's rule was thought divine.'

" 'They sought freedom to worship God, but I am sorry to record that the leaders were a bigoted, overbearing assembly of persons that ever claimed to be true Christians. Some of the leaders possessed a large degree of knowledge for that period, but withal they had many grave defects. They were ambitious, self-opinioned, irritable and conceited. Their knowledge did not digest well, the use of their learning tended to be crude. They had very pronounced opinions pertaining to their church. They brought with them across the ocean their faith in witchcraft, and their laws made it punishable by death. I do here denounce the teaching of Cotton Mather. He was a mur-derer. He was instrumental in destroying the natural pleasures of my life, beside causing the death of my mother and untold sorrow to my father and uncle. My mother was one of three women convicted and found guilty of witchraft at Salem, Mass., by a jury pledged to Cotton Mather. Poor dear mother, who had been an invalid for many years, was sentenced to be placed in a chair, strapped in, and on the end of a long pole to be dipped in the river. It was called a "ducking chair." My father, with many others, persuaded the Governor of the Colony to grant a pardon. The effects of the trial gave my mother such a shock that she became paralyzed upon her right side, became helpless, and failed to recover.

"'After her death,. my father and uncle decided it was time to leave the church at Salem and the scenes of continual cruelty by a band of pious, selfish, mistaken men. Collecting what valuables we possessed, on a cold night we started on our journey. After traveling ten hours through the deep snow, we reached Sandy Bay. The pioneer fishermen of the village rendered us much assistance, giving shelter and food, and in due time father and uncle built this house. It became our home. The villagers had learned of my mother's fate, and they always called our place of abode the "Witch House." What terrible crimes have been committed in this world by many persons claiming to be creatures of divine rights. They taught that God is love, and those same teachers condemned and executed innocent men and women, claiming they were possessed with the devil, witchcraft and sorcery. Let every person who loves his fellow-men teach that there are no ghosts or goblins or witchcraft, and that such mistakes are things of the past; that happy human life exists that the human family may reign supreme upon the earth which God created for all living things to rightly enjoy without fear. (Signed)

HELEN BRADCROFT.'

"The young lady read the manuscript at the breakfast table, and her hosts were much surprised at its contents, while Dorcas, who had listened attentively, remarked:

"'I allus wondered why folks called this the Witch House. Now I knows.'

"That is all I know about the Witch House," said the antiquary, "and as the church bell has struck nine, it is time for all honest folks to go to their homes."

Wrapping a large grey shawl about him he departed. Putting the cat in the cellar, the grocery man left the building for the night, accompanied by his visitors.

Jacques Dalcroze and have as their object the co-ordination and control of the body, that it may act efficiently and as a whole. The exhibition showed of what value these exercises are to anybody and in how many ways they are useful. Mlle. Ponse especially won the applause of the audience in the "Ave Maria."

It has been decided not to present "Twelfth Night," as announced, but to give three or four one-act plays. Lack of public interest in Shakespeare is the reason assigned.

THE EXHIBITION AT THE GALLERY-ON-THE-MOORS

Those interested in art are hailing with delight the annual exhibition at The-Gallery-on-the-Moors. There was a notable gathering of artists and connoiseurs at the opening of the exhibition, Tuesday, August 2. On all sides one heard exclamations of delight as new beauties were discovered. It was indeed a wonderful collection, and we are sorry that our limited space prevents our discussing each in turn, but we will have to be content with mentioning only a few.

Perhaps the most striking picture was the portrait of Miss Hawthorne by Frederick G. Hall. This was a most lifelike portrait. The rich tints of the flesh were exquisitely rendered, and there was a fine feeling for texture—the difference between the materials of the dress and the old tapestry background being well brought out.

Another interesting picture, and full of atmosphere, was Northwest Wind, by Hobart Nichols. It was a most invigorating picture, one depicting wind, wild moors, and racing clouds with cool color.

In contrast to the coolness of Northwest Wind was the warmth and sunlight of A Summer Morning by Carl Nordell. Sunlight touched the yellow chair, the scarlet fan, and the red-gold hair of the sitter to glowing life. It had all the warm brilliance of a Sorolla.

J. William Fosdick, on the other hand, chose a color scale of deeper tone in his The Passing of Night. Wonderful feeling for form and contrasting values was apparent in this painting. The nude figure in the center silhouetted against a faintly luminous sky through which one felt the coolness of approaching dawn rather than light itself.

In an October Evening by Frederick J. Mulhaupt, the last level rays of the sinking sun, flooding trees and stream and turning all to dull gold is depicted. The misty distance and the atmosphere of the late Indian summer afternoon was cleverly executed.

Another clever painting of atmosphere was Paul Cornoyer's After the Shower. The dull coloring of buildings reflected in the wet and slippery pavements of a village under a storm cloud, behind which one felt the sun

By Edith Russell Carden.

Pushing aside pine branches, grabbing one now and then as we slip and slide on the deep carpet of brown pine-needles which covers a winding path through jutting roots of stately trees, we come to an open square of light. Into this silent sunlit space we pass. This is "Cathedral Pines." In the center rises the large frame studio of Mr. Carl Nordell—like an ark that got lost in the forest. Within, the artist sits by a fireplace gazing with questioning eyes at a painting in the corner. Other canvases—a rich variety of color and subject—form his background. The rest of the studio is a contrast between old tapestries and unfinished beams.

Mr. Nordell is tired of the city. He takes rather to the woods "where you don't have to depend on the middleman," and his art has the essence of his woodland surroundings. Some people there are who cannot "see the forest for the trees"—Mr. Nordell's philosophy misses neither.

* * * *

The floor is finished. The polishing brush stands idle in a corner. We know that Mr. Cornoyer must have lost considerable weight in polishing this floor, though he takes pains to convince us that it was a matter of only twelve pounds. The remaining pounds combine to give him a jovial, wholesome effect, and in his face is a look of genuine kindliness.

Perhaps it is this artist's optimism that makes him a specialist in rainy days. On an easel by his door is a painting. It is a street scene on a rainy day and has a similar quality to his "After the Shower," which is winning favorable comment at the Gallery-on-the-Moors.

We miss that forgotten umbrella. We would like to call a taxi but dare not venture from dripping awnings to slippery pavements. We are just making brave decisions when our mind is called in out of the rain by chords from Chopin.

Mr. Cornoyer is seated at the piano which stands unobtrusively at an end of the great north light. On the further side runs a balcony and from it hang East Indian draperies lending their brilliance to the faintly tinted walls.

OLD GLOUCESTER ROMANCES

JUDITH SARGENT

By J. R. P.

(Copyright. All rights reserved.)

Foreword—The early and later history of Cape Ann abounds in many romantic, heroic, and adventurous tales well worth preserving, many of which have not appeared in print.

It is the design of the writer to present some of these to the readers of The Shore, with the belief that they will meet a receptive audience.

In our issue of July 23 we told of Mary Epes, who eloped from England with a sailor, William Sargent, and of how her virtues have been perpetuated in the fact of her maiden name coming into use as a Gloucester prefix name.

Today we write of Judith Sargent, no doubt, from all points of view, the most celebrated women that Gloucester has produced. And it is a matter of speculation whether the characteristics which were so outstanding in Judith Sargent and, in fact, the entire Sargent line, was not the heritage bequeathed her descendants by Mary Epes.

Judith Sargent was the favorite daughter of Capt. Winthrop Sargent, a leading merchant of the pre-Revolutionary period. The Sargents lived in a manner befitting the leading family of the town. The good fairies had been present at her birth and had endowed her both with beauty and intellect. Like all the Sargents, she was of an ambitious and imperious nature. She received the best education from private tutors which the time could afford, which according to the custom of those days followed along literary and poetical lines.

She early showed talent as a writer of prose and verse. She wrote under the pen name of "Honora Martiesia," and her output was voluminous. If genius be a capacity for hard work then Judith Sargent came within the charmed circle. Unfortunately none of her effusions appear to have the quality which has embalmed them in the amber of perpetuity. Epes Sargent, who came in a later generation, was an equally assiduous writer. He had better luck. One of his productions survives in the sea-songs of the world, the stirring "Life on the Ocean Wave."

Judith grew beautifully to womanhood, as a portrait by Copley testifies.

I have not seen you
Beneath tall cypress trees,
Nor yet in the blue shadows of an Eastern Temple.

You have not lived with me
In marble palaces,
Nor swept through paved court-yards,
To a Fountain's rim, to watch the slow ascent of a burnished moon.

And yet it seems that all,—
Cypress trees, Temple, Court-yards,
Are but the frame that I would set you in,

"MIRAGE"

Outdoor Fairy Masque To Be Held At Graffly Grove

There are doubtless many along the North Shore who will recall the delightful masque given three years ago for the benefit of the Red Cross in the unique outdoor theatre on the grounds of Charles Graffly, the sculptor. This year the Wellesley College Semi-Centennial Fund will be the beneficiary. Miss Graffly, who is a graduate of the college has written and is now actively engaged in training the cast for the new production. It is a myth—with neither period nor place to mar its dream-like quality. We are to be transported to the fairy-land of a little Princess who wearies of her throne, and to her garden, ravaged by a common son of the forest, thus, by a single thoughtless deed, binding together the fortunes of the forest and the court. New freedom struggling with old memories is the keynote of "Mirage," the myth of a Queen's awakening. The doors of fairy-land will remain open to North Shore visitors from August 18 to 20, inclusive.

about to break, was excellently rendered.

Walter L. Palmer's Winter's Advent was a clever painting of snow covering evergreens with a deep, fluffy blanket. There was a very skillful handling of light and shadow. The level rays of the early winter sun touched to glistening whiteness the tops of the branches.

And so the list grows. We wish that we had the space to mention at greater length Melting Snow, by Fern I. Coppedge, in which one felt the first hint of Spring despite the snow-covered landscape; At the Concert, by Theresa F. Bernstein, a most unusual picture, showing a detail of execution which at first glance is not apparent; Scarlet Poppies and Other Things, painted by Eben F. Comins, showing skill in the handling of color and textures; Chestnut Street, Salem, Mass., by Felecie Waldo Howell, showing the sunlight through shimmering trees; Camelia Whitehurst's Anne, a dainty miss in white with a pink parasol, executed with sweetness and a sympathetic touch; the interesting and unusual coloring of Marion Opton's Portrait; and the marvellous flesh and fine modelling of the head of Carlotta by Marion Boyd Allen; and a host of others that deserve mention.

There were several bits of sculpture on view, also. Anna Vaughn Hyatt had several pieces on exhibition, all of animals. These were exquisitely done after her usual style.

The Spirit of the Sea by A. H. Atkins was the largest piece on exhibition. It represented a nude figure bounding over the waves, poised on the back of a dolphin. The vastness of the sea, freedom and wild grace were felt as one gazed at the figure.

Overseas Women's Medalion by Anna Coleman Ladd was beautifully modeled. Wistfulness, tenderness and nobleness were imprinted on the features.

Relief in Minature, Dr. Barger, by Harriet H. Mayor, was a wonderful head, and showed great detail of execution.

Louise Allen, Katharine W. Lane, Gertrude C. Fosdick, Harriet W. Frishmuth and Edna Isbester Spencer all had interesting pieces in the exhibition. —C. A. S.

Miss Mary Hoyle, niece of Mrs. John Hays Hammond, who with her mother is occupying the Foster cottage at Freshwater cove, gave a tea to a number of her North shore friends Friday afternoon.

THREE MINUTES IN THREE STUDIOS

The draperies part, and a tall, thin gentleman enters. He is Mr. Darrel, who is spending the summer at East Gloucester, painting with Mr. Cornoyer at his studio. Not wishing to impose, we rise to make a tactful exit, but Mr. Cornoyer recklessly stops us with an eager, "Do come—I want to show you something very special." On tip-toes we enter the kitchenette at his heels. He carefully opens a cabinet door and takes a bundle from an upper shelf. We prepare to admire some rare and valuable work of art. Mr. Cornoyer opens the bundle and reveals: One dish-mop, one milk bottle washer and one glass polisher. "And now I shall remain a bachelor," he assets.

Not wishing to dim his illusions, we resolutely take our departure, to the accompaniment of his cheery "Be sure to come again."

* * * *

Mr. Comins is lightly touching his latest painting. Some Chinese objects are in the foreground. The picture strikes the key-note of this studio which at once gives the impression of many flowers and of something Chinese; Chinese reds and blues. Through an open doorway comes the shrill meow of a catbird, drawing our ears —and eyes—towards an intimate little gardenette. "Yes, kitty," remarks Mr. Comins, "come and see what I am doing." For a moment the catbird perches on the window sill, inquisitively peering in, then with a feline call he departs as suddenly as he came. Fainter and fainter sounds his cry, marking the distance over which he flies.

Out in the gardenette two robins splash about in a bird bath; hilarious squeaks and whistles register their gratitude to Mr. Comins for his kindness in providing bathing facilities. As we wend our way homeward, we almost wish we were robins carelessly splashing about under green trees.

COMMUNITY DRAMATIC SCHOOL

The Community Dramatic School presented last Saturday James Oppenheim's poetical drama, "Night." The cast was as follows:

NIGHT

By James Oppenheim

The Scientist.....Lillian Plonk
The Priest.....Ruth Havey
The Poet.....Margaret Lyle
The Woman.....Adelaide Miller
The Man.....Miss Fiske

Costumes designed by James Shute and executed by Rita Langhorne and Martha Flint. Setting by Robert Goode and Willard Thorpe.

"Night" is a commonplace allegory of the search for the Secret of Life, written in a style which we suppose is intended to resemble the plain splendor of the Bible. The illusion of a hilltop on an October night was ingeniously suggested by two screens and a blue curtain. The actors showed that, given an actable play, they would have done something interesting.

Miss Josephine Gemberling played some violin pieces to Mr. Thorpe's accompaniment, Svensen's "Romance" and Frederic Hahn's "Love Song" among them. Miss Plonk then gave a reading of the symphonic play "Mother," which the school presented last summer.

The second group of plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors will consist of four one-act plays of the sort given in former seasons, instead of "Twelfth Night," as announced. The management will present Sidney Grundy's "In Honor Bound," in which Mr. Buswell will play; Percival Wilde's comedy, "The Noble Lord," Alice Brown's New England play, "Joint Owners in Spain," and Lord Dunsany's thriller of old Egypt, "The Queen's Enemies," with Madeleine Laurent as the queen. Mr. Adrian, whose brilliant work is already well known, is designing the costumes. —A. H. M.

"BATIK" EXHIBITION

Batik panel hangings, the work of the Viennese artist, Karoly Fulop, form an especially interesting exhibition which is to open at Rocky Neck, East Gloucester, on Sunday next. Each piece of silk is a decorative composition of imaginative figures against backgrounds developed from Hungarian peasant patterns, the whole forming both a design and an emotional unit. The colors are rich but not bizarre, and appear in a variety not possible with the ordinary Batik worker. By means of secret methods of technique, Mr. Fulop has been able to use as many as 26 colors in one design where other craftsmen are limited to four.

Cards have been sent out for the exhibition which will be held in a gallery especially arranged for the purpose, for a week and day only, opening at 3 o'clock Sunday. Mr. Fulop, a Hungarian by birth, now living in New York, is also a painter, having a sample of his work now hanging in the Gallery-on-the-Moors exhibition in Gloucester. His artistic feeling is very keen and very genuine and his expression of it shows great skill in many mediums. Mr. Fulop will be present during the exhibition.

A portrait of her by Stuart some years later shows these charms matured and ripened. When hardly out of her teens she was married, just before the Revolution, to John Stevens, a merchant of the town.

JUDITH SARGENT HOUSE

This marriage was one of the events of the period. Nothing was left undone to make the occasion notable. The fine fleur of all eastern Massachusetts came to the wedding in all the elaborate gowning of femininity and almost equal showing trappings were worn by the male gallants of the period.

The tables were laden with choice viands served by a corps of slaves, male and female, of which there were quite a number in the Sargent household.

The daughter of Winthrop Sargent must have a house befitting her quality. Work was accordingly commenced on a residence on a sightly plot in the Middle street which ran to Fore, now Main street. The house was finished in good time. Nothing was spared in its construction. The most skilled craftsmen and woodworkers were employed. The result was that one of the finest specimens of interior decorations and carvings of any mansion in New England was installed therein. Fortunately these have remained intact.

To this mansion, as her wedding gift, John Stevens brought his bride. But his happiness was shortlived. His ventures proved disastrous and to avert being cast into jail by his creditors, which was the custom of the time, he fled in a vessel to St. Eustace, a port in the West Indies, in which asylum he died a short time after.

Just prior to the Revolution, Rev. John Murray came to Gloucester and preached the doctrine of Universalism as it is understood today. He was greatly opposed but kept on and made many converts, among whom were the Sargents. His entree into these cultured circles brought him into association with the lately bereaved widow of John Stevens, in her early twenties.

Marriage soon resulted and her fame acquired additional luster as the wife of the divine who was making such an impression in theological and civic circles. Murray was appointed chaplain by General Washington to a Rhode Island regiment and his wife accompanied him and saw much of the society of Newport, even then standing out in the social centers of the country.

But to one of her ambitious temperament the drab life of the town after a devastating war possessed little attraction. She removed with her husband to Boston, where she moved in a larger circle of congenial literary and social lights. Her husband died in 1815, after which she removed to Natchez, Miss., making her home with her daughter, Julia Murray, who married a man named Bingaman. There side by side where the magnolia blooms fragrantly and the birds make vocal the air with melody nearly all the year, are three graves—Judith Sargent Murray; her daughter, Julia Murray Bingaman, and her granddaughter. The literary fame she sought so hard and craved, never came.

But if none of Judith Sargent's literary productions lives to perpetuate her name, the house builded for her dowry bids fair to accomplish that end. Through the efforts of the late Rev. Dr. Levi M. Powers, recent pastor of the mother church of the Universalists here, the property has been secured as a permanent memorial and with it the land and buildings, running to Main street, which constituted the grounds of the place. These structures will be removed and the grounds restored and planted with those flowers dear to the grandmothers. Then in fancy the sentimental visitor may ramble through these paths and be reminded by the fragrance of the flowers of the memory of its beautiful mistress, who lived and wrought among these idyllic surroundings—a reminiscence of old Gloucester bygones.

STAIRWAY—JUDITH SARGENT HOUSE

A SHORT, SMOOTH MOTOR TRIP TO THE SHOPS OF

MAGNOLIA

Mid-summer at Magnolia brings the season's festivities to an apex and with full hotels and all available cottages taken the month promises to be a gala one.

The Hotel Oceanside, as of yore, is the mecca of the summer's gaieties and dances, dinner parties, luncheons and whist form only a small part of the day's activities.

A prominant guest at the Oceanside who recently joined his family is Mr. Howard Heinz of Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Heinz and sons were guests at the hotel last season.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hayes and four-year-old daughter, Barbara, who are returning to their home in East Orange by motor after a visit with Mrs. Hayes' parents, were guests at Mt. Hermon School, Greenfield, Sunday. Mr. Hayes was a member of the class of 1912.

Cards were received the past week announcing the marriage of Miss Sara Clark, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Dearborn Clark, to Mr. Archibald Edes, on Thursday, July 23, at East Hampton, Long Island. It will be remembered that Mr. Edes, who is a graduate of Harvard college and also of Harvard law school, was for a number of years connected with the management of the Hotel Oceanside. Mr. and Mrs. Edes will be at home after September at Hotel Darby, Los Angeles.

Miss Irene Wren, who has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. F. K. M. Rehn during July, left Wednesday for the Adirondacks, where she will remain until September.

Mrs. Jacob Hagar of Weston is the guest of Miss Emily Gray of Cambridge. Mrs. Hagar is a cousin of General Leonard Wood.

Beach parties are ever popular at Magnolia. Among those enjoying such an event a short time ago were the Misses Anna Whalen, William Earle, Alyce Symmes, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hodgkinson and Wallace Douglas, all the guests of D. Pulsifer Colville of Doxbury.

August always brings Mrs. Edward D. Harlow, her daughter, Miss Edith Harlow, and son, Arthur Harlow, back for another sojourn at Hotel Oceanside.

Mrs. I. G. Lombard, who with her daughter, Mrs. H. E. Haass, are spending the remainder of the season at Hotel Oceanside, were the guests of Mrs. Haass' daughter at Hotel Rockaway the past week.

Among those from the middle west enjoying a summer on the North Shore are Mr. and Mrs. James A. McPherson, Jr., of Kansas City, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Yates of Omaha, Neb., and Mrs. Mary C. Hull of Dubuque, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Hussey and daughter, Miss Helen Hussey, who are season guests at Hotel Oceanside, were joined by Edward Hussey the past week. Mr. Hussey is in business in New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hill Morgan, who have been spending a few days at Hotel Oceanside, have returned to York Harbor.

Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Edes stopped a few days at Hotel Ocean-

SEPTEMBER in August, has been the unusual and ideal weather of the past week —ideal in every sense of the word. There has never been a season when the August conditions for outdoor diversions were so favorable. Thus far no trace of the dog day temperature which characterizes July being apparent.

Henry D. Sleeper has just completed some improvements at his residence "Beauport" having installed two rooms of unusual design, one an octagonal dining room overlooking the sea, the color motif of the draperies and works of art being scarlet.

Miss Edith Notman has as her house guests at "Three Waters", Miss Mary Barnes of Andover and Miss Cady of New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. William Van Leer of Philadelphia are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Jones of "Moormere." Mr. Van Leer is the brother of Mr. Jones.

House guests of the George E. Teners at "Ardarra" include Mrs. Samuel Clement of Buffalo, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Clement, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Clement, Mrs. E. Frost, Mrs. Catherine Brown, Mr. Alex C. Tener and son, George Evans Tener 2d, of Sewickley, Penn.; and Mrs. William Thayer Brown of East Orange, N. J.

Mrs. Celeste D. Heckscher, who has the Cecilia Beaux cottage this season is composer of many lyric songs of Hungarian and Spanish themes, both orchestral and vocal. She is also the composer of an opera "The Rose of Destiny", which has been sung at the Metropolitan opera house in Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederic G. Hall have as their weekend guests at "Stoneacre," Mr. and Mrs. James A. Parker of Brookline.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall gave a small musical at "Stoneacre" recently to hear a local vocalist of promise, Miss Mary Silveria, who was accompanied by George B. Stevens. A number from Eastern point and Annisquam were among the auditors who were charmed with the sweet voice of the young singer.

Mrs. J. Murray Kay has as her guests at her Eastern point home, Mr. and Mrs. J. Murray Kay, Jr., and Mrs. Rudd Shepherd.

Miss Katherine Pollard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard, gave a birthday party to 12 at the residence of her parents at Eastern point recently.

SOCIAL activities, although informal, have been decidedly lively during the week. The community life in this direction centers in the Golf club and the fact that the Eastern point links have been discontinued has tended to concentrate still further the outdoor activities of the entire East Gloucester section in this particular organization, court and golf links being correspondingly in demand. The possibilities of the club here have been accenuated in consequence.

Much to the general regret, "The Merry Whirl" which proved such a social and artistic success at the Moorland casino in past years, will not be given this season. The state laws relative to scenery prohibit its presentation. The same is the fact relative to the helps' annual minstrel show, an occasion of much enjoyment, which must be passed up for the same cause.

There has been much entertaining during the week at the Bass Rocks club. Friday, Mrs. E. B. Plympton of Boston had six tables at bridge and 30 at tea. Monday, Mrs. Fleitz of Detroit, who purchased the Arthur Spring cottage, and her sister, Miss Hartnett, had four tables at bridge and 26 for tea. Tuesday, Mrs. Walter Carl of Boston, who is occupying the Worcester cottage, Beach road, had 50 for tea, and Mrs. Carson of the Moorland gave a bridge of five tables and tea.

The mixed foursomes golf tournament was won by Walter F. Roberts and Miss Alice Scott, having the best net score, John Roberts and Mrs. McCord being second.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Chandler are entertaining at "Casa del Mar" Mr. and Mrs. John Lapham of San Antonio and Mr. Seth Gage of New York. Saturday night Mr. and Mrs. Chandler entertained their guests at a dinner at the Essex county club.

The moving pictures shown at the Moorland Casino every Monday and Thursday evenings are well patronized by the Bass Rocks colony. Among the recent "hits" was a picture of H. B. Warner in "One Hour Before Dawn." Mr. Warner is summering near the Moorland and much interest was shown in his picture, which was one of the finest mystery plays seen here for some time.

Ward's premier orchestra is playing for the dances at the Moorland Wednesday and Saturday evenings, as well as the regular Friday night concerts, given in the lobby. They are most en-

THE yachting interest is constantly increasing here and it is gratifying to note that this is so. The club races Saturdays and Sundays are keenly contested. The introduction of the Fish class has afforded a decided stimulus to the game and is educating a new generation to the sport.

Among the latest boat owners are the sons of Robert H. Richards of Wilmington, Del., who have "The Pines" for the season. They have bought one of the Norton boats and are among the most enthusiastic yachtsmen in this locality.

Letters received from Miss Anna Vaughn Hyatt, who is in France at the invitation of the French government to attend the dedication of her equestrian statue of Joan of Arc at Blois, which will occur some time in September, states that she is resting near the Swiss frontier.

HAWTHORNE INN

The weeks social activities at the Inn include movies Monday and Friday evenings; guests dance Wednesday and Saturday evenings with a concert Sunday evening at eight. The bell boys card party was held Thursday evening and next Wednesday the annual lawn party is scheduled. The employes hold their dances Thursday evenings. Informal tennis tournaments are in progress on the courts and boating, bathing, golf and kindred diversions fill up the days pleasures.

INDUSTRIAL SILVER EXHIBIT OF NEW ENGLAND SILVERSMITHS

A special exhibit of rare silver is to be held in the trellis room of the Hodgson, Kennard shop at Magnolia from August 13 to 18.*

This collection furnishes the best examples of modern silver obtainable in this country, which has been fashioned in the Providence workshops of the Gorham company, which has been perfecting silver of merit during the past 90 years.

side while touring through New England the past week.

Montreal is represented at Hotel Oceanside by Mrs. L. Marchand and the Misses Joseph, who will remain for the balance of the season.

Is it that the lounge of Hotel Oceanside makes an alluring place for bridge, or is it the fascination of the game that makes it so popular a form of recreation at the hotel?

On Saturday evening among those enjoying the game were Dr. and Mrs. W. R. P. Emerson of Boston, Courtney Guild of Boston and Mrs. E. G. Stacy of New York City. Another table included Mrs. K. E. Jewett of Des Moines, Ia., Mrs. D. B. Hussey of St. Louis, Mrs. Maurice Joseph and Mrs. Edwin Johnson of New York.

The Misses Marjorie and Marion Dakin of Boston are among those who will serve at the buffet supper to be held on the lawn of "Twin Light Manor," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bowles of Worcester at Bass Rocks tomorrow evening.

Returning to Hotel Oceanside for the remainder of the summer is Mrs. Kenyon Cox of New York City.

Registered at Hotel Aborn for August is Mrs. C. C. Zollinger of Ohio. Mrs. Zollinger is accompanied by her grandchildren.

Others registered at this delightful hotel situated almost on the shore are Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Dunham and daughter of Brooklyn, Miss Valeria Connor of Saratoga Springs and Col. and Mrs. E. H. Haskell of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. John Chess Ellsworth have as their guest at "Wayside," Miss Grace Wilcox of South Bend, Indiana.

The Sunday afternoon races at the North Shore Swimming Pool are greatly enjoyed by the young folk of the summer colony. Attractive loving cups, which will soon be on display at the clubhouse, serve as a great incentive and the competition grows keener with each succeeding Saturday.

The list of events last week included a pool crossing event for midgets, a senior 25-yard dash, a junior 25-yard dash, a senior relay, a spoon and egg race for midgets, exhibition diving and a 50-yard dash for seniors.

The judges, including F. F. Rhodes and O. W. Richardson, made the following decisions:

Cross pool event for midgets: Alice Ellsworth, first; Anne Stevens, second, and Catharine Richardson, third.

Senior 25-yard dash: Fred Ellsworth, first; Henry Rowe, second, and Nolen Hussey, third.

Junior second class: Anne Richardson, first; Barbara Richardson, second, and Eleanor Rowe, third.

Senior relay, 100 yards: Winning team, Frank Rader, Nolen Hussey, Vanderburgh Johnstone.

Midget spoon and egg race: Catharine Richardson, first; Alice Ellsworth, second, and Louise McNeil, third.

Senior diving: Nolan Hussey, first; Henry Rowe, second, and Frederick Ellsworth, third.

Fifty-yard dash: Frederick Ellsworth, first; Gordon Dewart, second, and Nolen Hussey, third.

MY LADY GOES SHOPPING

The Mystery in Our Midst

As I telephoned my daily order to McPherson-Symmes, I gathered, from Marion's air of disdain, that the child had an important fancy to impart and hated to see a sympathetic ear wasted on a 'phone.

"Do married people never think of anything except where to buy the best food?" she asked, crushingly, as I hung up the receiver.

"I don't have to think of that—I KNOW," said I, "hence the long order that tried your patience, but let's skip from food to your latest discovery, sunbeam—what is it?"

"Do you know that Phyllis' aunt, sister and nephew are at the Oceanside?" queried Marion, mysteriously.

"Of course, I hear they are touring New England and what is more natural than that they should stop here and visit Phyllis en passant?"

Marion looked at me with pitying eyes. "They are here to spy on Phyllis! That fat aunt asked me one million questions about her, because she makes the mistake of taking me for a child"—

"But, Marion," I interrupted, "you speak as if Phyllis were a criminal fleeing from justice and her relatives' bloodhounds and detectives! Of course, I'd love to hear more of your story, but fate compels me to seek a new refrigerator—mine has never been the same since it sprang a leak on the day of Peggy's party. Jack says there is a marvelous one at the National House Furnishing Co."

"Wait!" exclaimed Marion, dramatically, "you are going on that Gorton-Pew jaunt that Chubby is getting up to amuse the kid nephew—all I ask is that you watch everyone and you will not have to be psychic to know that something is up!"

Marion, brave in that new shade of corn that Farr is featuring—in fact, she looked like a sample exhibit of one of Farr's recent window displays in that fashionable shade!—absurdly young and beautiful, appeals to me, but I never take her seriously.

However, that same day I had hardly joined that educational back-to-the-fish party, composed of Chubby, Phyllis and her relatives, and Jimmy to keep the ten-year-old nephew in order, when I sensed that something was wrong, but whether it was due to humidity or humanity I wasn't quite sure.

"Junior has never seen a fish plant," his mother explained. "It's so good of Mr. Chelton to arrange this party for him. It will be such an interesting topic for a composition when Donald returns to school."

Mrs. Donald Leigh was the type of Bostonian one finds in fiction, but as a matter of fact she was a New Yorker and took extension courses at Columbia! I thought her soft tan duvetyn slip-on, with hat to match, and a cream colored frilled guimpe adding the ultimate touch, was Fifth Avenue visiting Cape Ann, but it appeared that the whole costume had just left Lamson & Hubbard's, where she had shopped the day before! Now how can one trust a women like that!

As to the aunt, Mrs. Gerald Wymess, her greatest tragedy was a tendency to acquire superfluous pounds; her greatest problem, how to conceal them from the public. Hence, she spoke affectionately of Manahan's, where she had purchased a navy blue georgette over taffeta, which "actually fitted!" —"It's paneled front and back with diamond shaped appliques of the same silk held by wee buttons—chic without being fussy"—and wasn't Magnolia a dear little place?

As soon as I decently could I cornered Chubby, who was alternately flirting valiantly with Phyllis—it almost seemed as if it were for the family eye!—and looking extremely depressed. I caught him in the latter state.

"What's the funeral about?" I rallied him.

Chubby, as one who had been coached to act a part, answered in the gloomiest tones, "Nothing at all—I assure you I never felt happier in my life! It's just—that boy Donald—makes me aw'fly nervous—principle of the elephant and the mouse, you know. Men of my build dislike boys of his size. He thinks it's funny to ask me if I feel the heat more than other people." Chubby petered out, exhausted by his imaginary effort.

Meanwhile the boy in question was keeping Jimmy busy—when introduced to the Gorton fishing schooners, Donald had to be prevented from stepping off the edge of the wharf, then he filled his pockets with the fresh white salt that protects the dock, and insisted on riding in the "jiggers" that convey it.

"He's all right," laughed the guide, following my anxious eye, "and if he does lose a limb or two, we have a room fitted up as a regular hospital for any injuries that occur in our plant."

I thought we should have to use said room, but Jimmy, who has always needed a younger brother, just spread himself explaining how the cod are caught in "trawls" and tenderly laid on the tons of ice provided for that purpose and Donald was quiet through sheer interest.

"After the 'gurry' (insides) is removed and left at Boston to be made into oil, the fish are brought here and weighed and separated according to size," lectured Jimmy.

"Gee! If Mr. Chubby were a cod he'd be in a class by himself!" gurgled Donald.

"Don't get fresh," warned Jimmy, "or I'll have you salted along with the rest of the small fry. If you were a cod you'd be a flake in a fish ball."

Here the guide created a diversion, duly impressing us all, by showing us the finest salt in the world, which is brought from Sicily to add to the Gorton fish.

Donald had to be restrained from boning the fish—I must admit it looks fascinating—then he wanted to run the machine that presses the fish, but most of all he pined to eat the final product—flakey and white as snow—and Jimmy was hard put to pilot him through all his temptations!

"Strange, isn't it?" remarked Mrs. Leigh. "I had no idea (h) that Gorton put up anything but cods, and I find we have deep-sea world's to discover in roe, chowder, finnan haddie, etc. These souvenir booklets tell just how to prepare them. There is nothing like seeing these places first hand. It has been a well spent afternoon."

"But that is all we have spent," mourned Chubby to me. "Are we never to drown the impressions of the new found fish?"

"Cheer up, Chubby," I comforted him. "We are going to the Royal Restaurant now for real Chinese tea, as Mrs. Wymmes prefers it to ice cream."

"Don and I are going to Barker's," said Jimmy. "Tea isn't good for a boy and Barker's ice cream soda is an education—come to think of the size of the glasses, it's a liberal education. And if you don't mind too much, we'll join you people in Magnolia later, as we have to go to Gray's. Don needs a new baseball outfit he says, and Gray's is the place—follow your Uncle Jimmy."

And before we could remonstrate they had disappeared.

While we sipped the fragrant Oriental tea, I realized that Phyllis was playing a game with Chubby that I couldn't understand. The flirtation did not look natural, and though Chubby might have been her announced fiance he didn't look the part. The female relatives looked on with that interest which is deadly to the male, but I felt that they too suspected something that was not on the surface.

When the beloved chimes of the Gloucester Safe Deposit & Trust Co. rang out, "Tempus fugit!" as is its kindly custom, Mrs. Wymmes said that we simply had to go to the Jeanne d'Arc shop, which she had seen advertised in the Cape Ann Shore.

We found it the cosiest little place and Miss Louise Haeberle makes everyone feel like dropping in daily to make a call! Mrs. Wymmes bought a very unusual necklace. Mrs. Leigh, thinking of Donald, indulged in truly delightful photo-postcards of adorable kittens and dogs. (I suppose she thought that they belonged to the cards Every Child Should Know series.) Phyllis was drawn to the shell necklaces—magic colored, exquisite works of nature—which she bought for "models." While I lost my heart to the hand-made baskets.

It was with difficulty that Chubby lured us back to the car!

On the way to Magnolia Phyllis' fond relatives attempted to "pump" Chubby, but Phyllis became talkative and took off the lovely pin that Mrs. Wymess had brought her from Bigelow, Kennard & Co. for a "surprise-present" and dropped it, instead of showing it to me, so that we all bumped heads in recovering it, and conversation perished.

On arriving in Magnolia, Phyllis declared that we still had time for a "little shopping" and insisted on stopping at McCutcheon's to see the samples of English prints which may be ordered through the Magnolia branch, from the New York store.

Mrs. Wymess seconded the motion, "While we are there I want to see that imported Paisley silk scarf, in Persian design and coloring, of which you spoke, Phyllis. You said it was selling for a song, didn't you?"

"That was in New York," said Phyllis—she stopped, a wave of color engulfed her, then she hurried on—"But I'm sure you could order it through this branch. It was lovely—the blue and purple mingled as in a rare shell."

"Were you in New York recently?" asked her sister.

"No!" answered Chubby, perspiring copiously, "I was—I told her about the scarf. You see, I'm a silk connoisseur—an - an expert in things like that."

We all stared at Chubby, but for different reasons. Marion was right! —"something was up" and Chubby was evidently in the secret. I'll admit of a Sherlock Holmesian thrill.

And at McCutcheon's, Phyllis seemed to have forgotten the prints, but pored over household linen. Any woman may be forgiven from fondling a luncheon set of fairylike filet fraught with Italian cut work, and that towel, alive with Madeira embroidery and Mosaic handwork, should appeal is natural, but why this sudden interest in monograms? Delicate initialed artistry for soft linens and substantial and proud armorial monograms for solid weaves, such as only McCutcheon can fashion to order, Phyllis surreptitiously investigated while Chubby frantically endeavored to keep Mrs. Leigh trying on the inimitable silk sweaters.

Mrs. Leigh, however, had other views. "I am only going to be in Magnolia a few days," she declared—here Chubby sighed with relief—"and I do want to see all the shops—one picks up such bargains in August—let's be going on. I think I'd prefer a jacket to a sweater."

So it was Manahan's next, under my direction, as I knew they had stunning jackets—Lanvin models, in duvetyn and English homespun, that were ultra smart. Also I knew it was the week of their "Opening," and I had caught delectable glimpses of wraps and suits and gowns and dresses on my way to the Oceanside to a luncheon a few days earlier.

While there I was irresistibly drawn to invest in another evening gown. I don't know what Jack will say, but it's white and Jack loves me in white. How can anyone hold out against white point d'esprit over silver cloth, all lacy and filmy, and caught by a crush girdle of silver ribbon that ties on the side? When he sees it, Jack will understand.

Phyllis was most interested in a lovely Copenhagen blue homespun suit, trimmed with soft gray karacou fur. "There are all sorts of things here, suitable for 'the clan,' from Aunt Lida to Marion," exclaimed Phyllis—but, promising to return to them, we enticed her into Slattery's, as Mrs. Leigh was curious about "the Little White Salon."

There we found a showing of evening dresses that gleamed like jewels. Slattery evidently intends to tempt us all! There was a foamy jade chiffon over silver which is obviously meant for Peggy; a white but irridescent wisp of a gown just made for Mollie; a black and old-blue lace for Aunt Lida—she looks so like a French miniature in that combination—while Phyllis, who threatens that her next gown is to be a "Parisian vamp black," may choose between a black Canton trimmed with a fascinating jet fringe, or a lustrous black crepe lightened by crystal beads. As for me, the only way to do is to lead Jack into the Little White Salon, and let these captivating frocks speak for themselves.

"I don't like to be a spoil sport," apologized hubby, "but if we are going to the Community Dramatic School Play tonight, we'd better take a hint from these dresses and cut out something before dinner. The 'Florist Shop' may be light, but it is not to be approached with a mind dissipated by shopping. I am a mere man, and I need to rest my high brow before I'm called upon to rear it aloft on Workshop 47 heights."

The unusual length and coherence of Chubby's plea succeeded in curbing the shoppers, although Mrs. Wymess said that she had heard that Lamson and Hubbard's August sale was one of the social events of Magnolia, and Mrs. Leigh remarked coldly that she had not stopped at Thayer-McNeils in Boston simply because she had preferred to visit the artistic little branch shop of which Phyllis had written, but we persuaded them to wait, and, holding them firmly as we passed the attractively decorated windows of Hill and Bush, we succeeded in safely parking them at the Oceanside.

Phyllis and Chubby lingered a moment, and I overheard her saying, "You have been such a help. And you will hold them off, won't you?—while I go to Ballou's, Steele and Abbott Co., Patillo's, and all the places that might make them suspect?"

And Chubby, like a fat and fond knight, murmured that he would be her "traffic cop, family guide, or what not."

I stopped at Peggy's on the way home—she and Phyllis have been like sisters since the Green Eyed Monster's sudden death—and told her all the strange details, but she laughed at me, "You and Marion must stop reading lurid literature." she giggled, "keep to the Cape Ann Shore."

But I left still unconvinced, and Marion herself is not more eager than I am for the next instalment of the mystery in our midst. We may collaborate and write a movie for the North Shore Theatre, so watch for our ad. in the Cape Ann Shore.

FERRARI'S RECITAL

Assisted By Madam Sarson Gives Delightful Concert At Hawthorne Casino

A concert was given at the Hawthorne Inn casino Sunday evening which comprised a program and quality usually heard in the large musical centers.

The assemblage was fortunate in having Mr. Ferrari, the noted song writer present, and this fact shows how far Gloucester is developing as a Fine Arts colony in the summertime.

Ferrari is a Frenchman and, although he has been in this country but a few years, his reputation had long preceded his coming through his delightful compositions which have been a part of the repertoire of many of the greatest singers on the concert stage. He was an intimate friend of Caruso and the latter's caricature of him has appeared in various publications.

The great Yvette Guilbert, in her costumed programs, uses the dramatic and lyrical interpretations set to music by Ferrari. The program was prefaced with little "songs and their interpretations" and this proved a novelty in entertainment. Each song like a picture, was given a setting and one from the character of his remarks that was entirely harmonious. He interprets the music of the masters with all his heart and with fine dramatic feeling and perfect diction.

Aithough the program was given entirely in French, with the exception of the encore "Boats" — one of his own compositions—he seemed to possess a universal language through his interpretations. The program opened with his own charming song "Le Miroir" and this evoked a storm of applause. From that moment he held his audience until the last. The second number, Debussy's "Mandoline," was given with the fire of the real Spanish troubadour.

Then followed four songs in much more serious vein and here the artist had the opportunity of interpreting tragedy. These were "D'Une Prison" by R. Hahn; "Impressions Facesse" by Poldowski; "L'Heureux Vagabond" by Bruneau and "La Glu" by Gounod; Dalcrozes' gay little waltz song, "Le Coeur de Mie," and a group of her own compositions ended his program.

Of these, two were old French and given in "singing" pantomime; "Le Roi," A Fait Battre Tambour" and "La Cloche de Nantes," the last two being the dramatic climaxes.

Madam Sarson who has appeared here in concert for three seasons was very modest and insisted in giving Mr. Ferrari the most of the evening. She sang only two groups of songs, but these she did with much spirit and assurance.

Her voice is a high soprano of wide range and depth and very adaptable to Thomas "Mignon" which she sang by request. "Robin Adair," an old English ballad was also a requested number and this was done in truly lyrical ballad style.

A Russian group, "Nature Land," "Birch Tree," and "Over the Steppe," all by Gretchaninoff are splendid revelations of the modern Russian school and received so generous an amount of applause that Madam Sarson was compelled to add an encore.

It is to be hoped we may have Ferrari here again next season and in a similar program.

—Ethel May Moore.

SQUAM YACHTING

Saturday's Race One of Action and Life. Curlew Dismasted and Tomcod Capsized

A brisk southeasterly, accompanied by a choppy sea, flaked with whitecaps, were the conditions which prevailed during the race at Squam Saturday afternoon.

There was action aplenty, the Curlew being dismasted in the Bird class while the Tomcod in the Fishes took a strong puff and capsized.

The course was a run to the Channel buoy, a broad reach to Plum cove, a reach to the inner mark and a beat home.

In the Bird class the Auk, Tern and Mavis got away in the lead and held those positions to the Channel buoy, the Mavis pulling ahead and rounding first at Plum cove, the Auk being 30 seconds behind, Tern and Chickadee close astern.

All were reefed save the Curlew which carried full sail. While rounding, she carried away her mast and after the wreckage was cleared she was towed in by the club launch.

On the reach to the inner mark positions were unchanged. On the beat the Auk came into the lead passing the Mavis with the Tern second, the Mavis, which carried full sail throughout being third boat.

The Cat class got away on even terms. All carried full sail. At Plum cove the Catenary was in the lead with the Copycat two boat lengths behind at the turn, and these positions were unchanged at the inner mark.

On the beat home the Copycat showed superior windward work, footing fast also, and assumed a lead which she steadily increased to the finish, Sea Mew being second boat, and Catnip third, Catenary falling back to fourth position.

The little fishes got a thorough testing out and there was excitement in this division when the Tomcod, Miss Harriet Stevens, daughter of Brooks Stevens of Lowell and Bayview, capsized, she being accompanied by her brother.

Both are good swimmers and climbed up the side of the boat until the club launch ran up alongside and took them off. The boat was righted and towed in.

In this class Douglas Guiler in the Pike was first at Plum cove. C. H. Norton Jr. in the Catfish finished second. The summary:

A moderate southerly wind with a fairly smooth sea were the sailing conditions for the races at Annisquam Sunday afternoon.

In the Bird class were five starters, the Auk winning. The course in all three classes was a run to Plum Cove and a beat home. There were five starters in this division and all got away without handicap, the Albatross taking a slight lead at the channel buoy, which she maintained to Plum Cove. On the beat back, the Auk went into first place halfway between Plum Cove and the channel buoy and retained the lead to the finish.

John Norton got the advantage of the start in the cat class, but was handicapped by the fact that he was all alone and did not carry sufficient live ballast. However, he retained the lead on the run and rounded first at Plum Cove, Copycat being second and Catnip third boats. Donald Jelly thought he would repeat the move which has proved a winner in several races, so instead of following the leaders on the inshore tack toward Lanesville, he went about to port toward the Essex shore. He got the wind, but hit an adverse tide rip coming back which retarded him perceptibly, Copycat and Catenary coming home ahead in order.

In the fish class, Miss Harriett Stevens proved that the capsizing of Saturday afternoon had not dimmed her yachting ardor, for she came back strong with a win this afternoon, a win which required not only skill in sailing a boat, but judgment in deciding upon the proper move at the right time.

Some 16 boats got away all in a bunch in this class and, when they had got out in the river, the Bluefish had established a commanding lead. At the turning point at Plum Cove, Tomcod was fifth. All save the Bluefish and Tomcod stood over toward Lanesville, the two named coming about for the Essex tack and running into a favoring wind which carried them right along. At the lighthouse the Tomcod beat the Bluefish out of first place, the two boats taking the Squam side of the river down the home stretch, while the rest of the fleet took the westerly bank. ROCKAWAY
MASKED BALL

The annual masked ball of the guests of the Rockaway Friday evening was a most successful occasion from every point of view. There were many handsome and original costumes about 75 of the guests being so attired while a large number from the other hotels including a liberal delegation of the officers of the warships viewed the spectacle.

The prize winners in order were, Mrs. Marion Nickerson as a Chinese bride in a beautiful robe; Miss Phyllis Brackett as a white poodle taking first award for the most original getup; Miss Jane Schmidt as a Colonial belle was awarded the prize for the most effective child's representation.

Others noticed included Miss Henderson as one of the Follies; Miss Ethel Bradley as an Arabian lady; Miss Sayre as a Hawaiian belle; Miss Hunting as a bag of potato chips; Miss Peters as a bride; Dr. Nickerson as a kid; Mrs. Selden as a baby; Mr. Abbott as a policeman flirting with the nurse; Florence and Master Woolredge as toodle tops; Miss Mahoney as the Queen of Sheba; Miss Jackson as a Geisha girl; Wylie Johnson as a society belle; Mrs. Kirchmeier as a Belgian peasant; Jean McIntosh as a sailor boy.

John Yates and Robert Weil as clowns; Jane and Robert Schmidt as a colonial couple; Carl Kirchmeier as Capt. Kid; Marguerite Lincoln as a small girl; Miss Hecker, Carmen; Mrs. MacIntosh as Queen of Hearts; Miss Curtis as Spanish lady; Miss Vance as senorita; Miss O'Connell as Highland lassie; Mrs. Lowell as Turkish lady; Miss Anderson, rag doll; Miss Menzies, Carmelita: Mr. Riter, Mexican; Miss Sturgis, peasant; Marion Abbott, Daughter of Liberty; Caroline Johnson, Pierrette; Miss Edwards, powder puff; Miss Louis, Pierrette; Miss Haas, Pocahontas; Betty Smart, Japanese maiden; Mrs. Brackett, Night; Mr. Brackett, Pierrot.

General dancing followed the unmasking. Refreshments were served by the management.

Mrs. Marion Nickerson of the Rockaway gave a very enjoyable bridge party at the Hawthorne Tea Room to her friends Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Vaughan, Miss Keefe, Mrs. Lowell, Mrs. Selden, Mrs. Publicover, Mrs. Brackett, Miss Brackett, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Harmon, Mrs. Schmidt, and Mrs. Weil being present. The prizes were won by Mrs. Vaughan and Mrs. Keefe in bridge and Miss Brackett in hearts. Dainty refreshments were served.

Late arrivals at the Rockaway: Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hartland, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Chase, Worcester; Miss Jane F. Drake, Watertown; Miss Margaret Thomas, Mrs. H. P. Smart, Savannah; Evelyn J. Hathaway, Salem; Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Hallburg, Evanston, Ill.; Mrs. J. B. McCluny and son, Miss M. Louise Wilson, Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. Lawrence Hallberg, Norman Hallberg, Chicago; Nineveh Edwards, Detroit; Elizabeth M. Brewer, Quincy; Miss B. Brasseau, Mrs. J. E. Funk, New York; Mrs. J. W. Smyth, Melrose Park, Pa.; Mrs. E. R. Eidell, Miss R. Eidell, Philadelphia; Mr. F. J. Reichmann, Chicago; James H. Coghill, Morristown, N. J.; Frances Wilkinson, Orange, N. J.; T. WHAT'S DOING AT OUR COMMUNITY DRAMATIC SCHOOL

The lumbering 'bus suddenly stopped at the end of a unprepossessing road—"the end of the route." We painfully straightened ourselves and climbed out. On inquiring our way to the Community Dramatic School we were told, "Down that road." So down that road we went, and a more fascinating road would be hard to discover. "Atmosphere"—one felt it on all sides. Was this due to the ghosts of old fishermen who had departed on their last Great Voyage, leaving their snug little cottages behind them, or was it due to the indomitable spirit of the artists who had taken this old fishing ground for their own? Perhaps it was the combination of the two. As we passed the tiny cottages, we caught glimpses of canvasses through windows, of artists with easel and paint boxes already hard at work, though it was early in the morning. In fact, one felt bustling endeavor and happy activity on all sides.

Suddenly, a sharp turn in the road brought us to the end of the trail. "The Community Dramatic School"—we looked about for an imposing building to go with so imposing a title, but could find none. By the process of elimination we finally decided upon one a bit larger than those surrounding it. We were right. We entered. We came into a large, sunny room full of windows, which were all open, and the fresh, sparkling air was blowing through. The room, which hung right on the edge of the water, made one feel buoyant and happy.

The first thing on the program was the class in Dalcroze Eurythmics conducted by Mlle. Ponse. And right here let it be understood that Mlle. Ponse is an inspiring teacher. It was all we could do to keep our seats and watch, we wanted to throw ourselves bodily into the work that was being done. Mlle. Ponse, by her voice, by her enthusiasm and by her absolute knowledge of her subject lifted each spectator and pupil, out of her pet inertia. Every single pupil worked to her best endeavor. The sight was inspiring.

First there were exercises of suppleness. Did you ever try to kneel on one knee and touch your forehead to the knee of the other leg stretched straight to the side? Go and see the class in

NOTED COMPOSER AT EASTERN POINT

Mrs. Celeste D. Heckscher, the distinguished composer, is spending the summer at Eastern Point. In the attractive seclusion of Cecelia Beaux's studio Mrs. Heckscher spends her days in hard work, for her ever fertile genius will not permit her to rest on the laurels she has already won.

Yet with what satisfaction and pride can Mrs. Heckscher contemplate the magnitude of that which she has already achieved! As a composer of many orchestral works, operas, songs, pieces for piano, violin and 'cello, Mrs. Heckscher has gained the enthusiastic plaudits of her fellow musicians and the great enlightened public who have heard these works rendered by the leading orchestras and soloists in the country.

Mr. Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, and Mr. Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, upon the warm reception of Mrs. Heckscher's suite "Danses of the Pyrenees," incorporated this charming work into their regular repertoire for frequent performance.

Mrs. Heckscher is at present preparing a "Lecture Recital" of her opera, "The Rose of Destiny," to be given shortly at Cecelia Beaux's studio. This work, which was presented by the Philadelphia Operatic Society, is a "Mystical Opera" in two acts, of which both text and music, replete with vivid and poetic imagination, are by Mrs. Heckscher. The personages of the drama are depicted by "motives" felicitously expressive of their characterists, and in the development of the work Mrs. Heckscher treats the most varied episodes, some poignant and dramatic, other fantastical and gay; again others of tenderness and profound feeling, with the greatest mastery.

The score also contains several dances, a form in which Mrs. Heckscher excels, fairly revelling in a wealth of spontaneous and infectious rhythms and opulent colors.

Mrs. Heckscher has the proud distinction of being the first American woman composer whose production of opera has been presented.

—Cecile Talma.

THE GORHAM EXHIBIT

Rare Colonial Silverware From New England Treasure Chests Shown by New York House

Many old residents along the North Shore have loaned heirloom silver, some of it brought from England in colonial times, for the exhibits of sterling now being held at various summer resorts under the joint auspices of the Gorham Company and the Massachusetts Retail Jewelers association.

The exhibit at the New Ocean house, Swampscott, includes many rare old pieces of silver and others equally as interesting that are reproductions of the best made by such pioneer silversmiths as Paul Revere, William B. Durgin and Jabez Gorham, founder of the company that bears his name.

Dealers in antiques have co-operated with the jewelers in making the display as interesting as possible. Rare pieces of old mahogany form an effective background for the arrangement of the various dinner, luncheon and tea services. Flowers, too, are used in profusion.

The Swampscott exhibit will be carried to the Wentworth at Portsmouth next week and the week following will be shown at the Samoset at Rockland, Me. Early this week the exhibit was shown at the Hodgson and Kennard Company's attractive shop in the Colonnade at Magnolia.

Marguerite Walker Jordan, assistant to President Franklin A. Taylor of the Gorham Co., is in charge of the exhibits. She is regarded as an authority on old and modern silver.

When President Harding stopped at Poland Spring, Me., for luncheon and a game of golf, en route from his visit to Secretary Weeks of Lancaster, N. H., he was presented with a silver humidor by the Retail Jewelers association of Maine, Miss Jordan making the presentation at the first tee. She said the box was made by New England silversmiths and was given as a souvenir of the chief executive's visit to historic Poland.

The humidor made by the Gorham Co., bears the inscription, "To President Warren G. Harding from the Retail Jewelers Association of Maine, Poland Spring, August 6. 1921."

COL. ANDREW'S CANDIDACY

INTRODUCTION

The following is an extract from recent Washington correspondence in The Boston Transcript bearing on the candidacy of Col. A. Piatt Andrew of Eastern Point for Congress, all of which the editor of The Shore cordially endorses. Mr. William E. Brigham, the correspondent, is one of the best known journalists of the country and his opinions carry weight.

(Boston Transcript, August 10, 1921)

Many of the older officials in Washington are watching with keen interest the contest in the Sixth Massachusetts Congressional district in which Colonel A. Piatt Andrew of Gloucester is the candidate against the field for the republican nomination for the vacancy caused by the resignation of Congressman W. W. Lufkin. As far as the Massachusetts men are concerned, sympathies naturally are more or less divided, for the late Congressman Augustus P. Gardner, whom Mr. Lufkin served so long as secretary, had a strong hold upon the affections of the voters of the Sixth district and the friends of Major Gardner and Mr. Lufkin are understood to be unfavorable to the aspirations of Colonel Andrew. On the other hand, Colonel Andrew made a remarkable record in Washington, where he happened to occupy public office at a time when a man of his peculiar equipment found plenty of work to his hand, and in a measure he has impressed himself upon some of the important legislation of the country as few men had the opportunity to do. Now that Nelson W. Aldrich is dead, it is violating no confidence to say that Colonel Andrew was the real framer of the bill which eventually, although with im-

"HOUR OF MUSIC"

A very unique "hour of music" will be given at "Three Waters," Miss Edith Notman's beautiful Breton residence at Eastern Point, Wednesday, August 24, at half after four o'clock. Miss Harriette Cady, the distinguished New York pianist (Leschetizsky's pupil), who is visiting the North Shore for the first time, will give a Russian - Spanish program and will include her arrangements of Russian folk music which are well known to music lovers.

Such an unhackneyed program will, no doubt, appeal to lovers of piano music. Tickets may be had at leading hotels, East Gloucester. Miss Cady's personal address is care Mrs. Moore, 6 Clarendon street, East Gloucester. Among the leading music lovers interested in Miss Cady's musical success are Mrs. William E. Atwood, Mrs. Frederick G. Hall, Mrs. C. Russell Hinchman, Mrs. Celeste Heckscher, Mrs. William R. Harcourt, Mrs. Palmer and others.

eurythmics do it, and more, and smile in the doing. Then came exercises in concentration and alertness. There was no chance for any sleepy headedness here. Perhaps you think it would be easy to walk along and suddenly take two short steps backward when someone hollered "hop" at you. Perhaps!. But go and try it, and you'll change your mind. Last came a free interpretation of a presentation at court, which called for dignity and poise and perfect balance. And so the lesson closed. We would have liked to have it go on indefinitely.

Next came Mrs. Evans and the class in public speaking, followed an hour later by one in stage direction. "A good speaker inspires thought." By this one evidence alone Mrs. Evans is an excellent speaker. We "thought" from the time she uttered her first word, to the very last of all. A wealth of ideas was given out. It seemed to us that, at the end of two hours, we had enough food for thought to last a lifetime. And all this richness is right at hand, within the reach of all, to be plucked by whoever wills.

Are you a bromide? Then join Mrs. Evans' class immediately and learn originality. Anyone capable of using good judgment may be original. Is that not a comforting statement? Mrs. Evans assures us it is so. Originality certainly sparkled from the class. Mrs. Evans taught that one should so combine words that pictures are formed in the mind of the listener, to so combine words that the effect is as music, and last to so combine words that the alien emotions, laughter and tears, are provoked at the same time, giving birth to humor. The members of the class carried out her instructions in their interesting solutions of the problems given them. Clever ideas and expressions came from all sides. Members of the class gave several instances of refreshing word combinations: "verbal garbage," "clammy responsiveness," "stop gap conversation," "microscopic generosity" "jelly fish stability"—and yet the ones that said these words were even as you and I before Mrs. Evans changed them.

The class in stage direction is of great value to those having to do with the staging of plays. The numerous problems occurring in this work are discussed, and a great deal of valuable information acquired.

Twelve o'clock came all too soon. We were loath to leave. We had spent an inspiring morning. As we wended our way down the winding road, back out of the clouds to humdrum existence, we could not help but realize the "community spirit" that made all this possible, and of the beautiful little "Playhouse-on-the-Moors" which is its culmination.

—Mildred Peabody.

Last Saturday's entertainment at the Community Dramatic School began with three recitations by Miss Margaret Lyle, of a shop-girl, a woman at a modernist art exhibit and of an old maid. Miss Louisette Talma then played several pieces and somehow managed by the vigorous, brilliant ease of her playing to atone even for a piano grown old by the sea. The small crimson curtains then parted on "The Florist's Shop," with the following cast:

THE FLORIST'S SHOP
Winifred Hawkridge

Maude .....Julia Henning
Henry .....Margaret Lyle
Miss Wells .....Elizabeth Striker
Jackson .....Miss Hickey
Slovsky .....Jack Rauber

This little comedy from the Harvard 47 Workshop was played with such engaging buoyancy and naturalness, in so fresh and pleasant a spirit that we feel sure the actors enjoyed it as much as the audience. Miss Henning, as the facilely emotional clerk, gave an especialy delightful performance. Willard Thorpe deserves great credit for devising so charmingly convincing a setting in such cramped quarters. Next week the school plans to play Susan Glaspell's "Trifles."

Preparations for the second group of plays at the Gallery-on-the-Moors are in full swing. Mr. Crosby is particularly busy, since he not only directs "In Honor Bound," but also takes a leading part in it. —A. H. M.

COLE'S ISLAND—THE BRAMBLES

Mr. and Mrs. Parker W. Whittemore of Boston were among the early seasons arrivals at their handsome Cole's Island residence.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Haring Dickinson, who have been spending the first of the season at the Brambles, have gone for a season to their home in the New Hampshire foothills at Fitzwilliam, N. H.

Mr. and Mrs. John P. Sylvester of Somerville have taken occupancy of their cottage built for them a few years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Merrill of Newton Center, who make their summer home in the Cole's island colony are established there for another season.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester P. Jones and daughter of Arlington came the first of the season to their cottage here.

According to Miss Jordan, there is no section of the country where the art, beauty and permanence of sterling silver is more appreciated than in New England. This is particularly true of the North Shore section, she said. Such old families as the Woodbury, Haraden, Ellery, Babson, Stacy, Mansfield, Davis and Hildreth connections of Gloucester and others in Salem, Lynn and Nahant have notable collections.

Some of these pieces are more than 200 years old. There is a beaker for instance, owned by a Gloucester sea captain who sailed the East Indian seas, and whose collection of Spanish coin was melted down to make the cup. The old silver dollars were converted into the beaker by one of the first silversmiths of Massachusetts. The cup bears the date 1760.

A sugar and cream loaned by a Newburyport family is of handwrought silver and has been handed down from one generation to another for two centuries. Equally as interesting are a set of spoons loaned by Mrs. Preston Friend. They were a wedding gift to her great, great grandmother, a Gloucester belle of colonial times.

Other spoons from the collection of Miss Isabel Lane of Gloucester, a descendant of "The Fighting Haradens," are also to be seen in the display. Capt. Jonathan Haraden, a hero of the Revolutionary War, was one of those early sailors whose remarkable exploits and travels have been handed down to the present day. Treasures brought from old world ports are owned by members of his family and include not only silver, but beautiful china as well.

One of the most interesting pieces is a silver comb bought by Frances Hildreth of Gloucester with the first money she earned as a school teacher. That was 150 years ago. It was loaned by Miss Frances Hildreth Estabrook.

Among the reproductions from the Gorham studios is a Paul Revere tea pot and coaster. It is all handwrought and hand engraved and is an exact reproduction of one made by Revere before he became famous for his ride to Lexington and Concord. Another interesting reproduction is an individual chocolate pot made in London by Archambo in 1738. Other things include a colonial muffiniere, and old English caster and a Plymouth after dinner coffee set.

Heirloom silver is used in the exhibit to emphasize the fact that gifts of silver are gifts that stand the ravages of time and gather about them as years go by the tender associations of each succeeding generation.

Miss Jordan contends that silver has always been a mark of family distinction and if a good design 200 years old is invaluable today, it behooves the present generation to plan for the heirlooms of tomorrow by choosing gifts that combine beauty, permanence and practicability.

Miss Jordan's work is to interest the American woman of today in silver to such an extent that she will prefer a few pieces of sterling to a chest of substitute. For the past generation she claims that women have been getting away from the true values of life by accepting the make-believe for the real. This, she says, is hitting the home life of the country a knockout blow.

"We've been eating tinned soup and canned beans instead of the real home cooked kind," she said, "and at the same time we've been setting our tables with plated instead of sterling silver. The solid silver spoons our great grandmothers cherished seem to mean nothing to us. I would like to get home makers all over the country to start collecting sterling with the same love and enthusiasm that book lovers collect books."

Miss Jordan believes that love of silver is inherent in every woman and that the appeal being made by the Gorham Co., for appreciation of the art that lies in sterling will be effective. The exhibits are just one feature of the plan.

Home economics teachers at Columbia and other colleges are co-operating. A recent demonstration and lecture on "How to Set a Smart Dinner Table" was atterded by 300 summer school students from the household arts department of Columbia. The class was held at the Gorham shop on 5th avenue. This was the first of a series to be held in college and university towns throughout the country.

She is also urging brides and engaged girls everywhere to build their homes around a few pieces of solid silver instead of beginning with plated ware. In this connection she has advanced a new idea in hope chests and that is for girls to accumulate silver on birthdays and at Christmas and graduation. The plan has met with favor in many places.

Popularizing sterling is no hard task in New England, Miss Jordan explains. The silver industry in America originated here, and that high regard for the best in everything which is characteristic of the people, has been manifested in a marked extent in New England homes. This is true of furniture, linens and china as well as silver.

TO MY LADY IN SEARCH OF THE DISTINCTIVE

A SHORT, SMOOTH MOTOR TRIP TO THE SHOPS OF

MAGNOLIA

NEVER before have the gardens of Magnolia bloomed so luxuriantly! Guests who, despite the day of the motor car, enjoy an early morning walk, are often seen admiring the graceful arrangement and exquisite coloring of the Costello C. Converse garden on the Shore road or the beds of heliotrope on the estate of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Farnum on Boulder avenue. The artistic forms and fantastic shapes of the Oceanside beds—holding the season's popular and prevailing blooms, come in for their share of praise from the passer-by. Indeed, a garden day, which has been so popular along the shore this season, could be held at Magnolia to advantage, both to charity and lovers of nature at its best.

Mrs. Henrietta Macdonald and daughter, Miss Karen Macdonald of Cambridge, who have in former seasons occupied their Shore road bungalow, are spending the greater part of this summer on their farm at Duxbury.

Mrs. Marshall Field of Washington, who has been a guest at Hotel Oceanside since early July, left Magnolia on Monday for an extended motor tour. Mrs. Field will spend a week with her niece, Mrs. Albert Beveridge of Beverly Farms, later in the season.

Miss Emily Gray of Hotel Aborn was hostess at a luncheon Thursday at the tea house on Norman avenue.

Mrs. Jacob Hagar of Weston, who has been spending a fortnight at Magnolia, returned to her home the latter part of the week.

Miss Margaret Corlies of Att Lea house has been entertaining her niece for the week. Miss Corlies was recently in an automobile accident in Boston, but her many friends will be glad to know that she has quite recovered.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kennard of St. Louis are the guests of Mr. Kennard's mother, Mrs. S. A. Kennard, at her home on Fuller street.

William Baxter Closson, who has one of the few remaining studios at Magnolia, is among those to exhibit at the Gallery-on-the-Moors this season. Mr. and Mrs. Closson make a long season at Magnolia, arriving early in June and often enjoying the month of October at their attractive cottage off of Fuller street.

Returning to Magnolia for another season is N. D. Maher and daughter of Norfolk, Va. The Maher family occupied the Chick cottage on Norman avenue a few seasons ago.

Mrs. E. M. Binney of Boston, who is spending the season as usual at Hotel Oceanside, entertained her son, Dr. G. H. Binney, and Mrs. Binney at luncheon Monday.

Magnolia summer residents noted on the links of the Essex County Golf club the past week include C. D. Cox of Cleveland, Dr. Charles Wadsworth, Jr., of Philadelphia, James P. Bush of Columbus, Costello C. Converse of Boston and S. P. Bush of Columbus.

It almost seemed like the olden days to have a tennis tournament in progress on the Oceanside courts the past week. There was a time when the

EASTERN POINT

THE Gallery-on-the-Moors, with its excellent exhibit of paintings, has formed the chief interest for the Eastern Point colony, as well as of other resorts within motoring distance.

Sunday afternoon an especially large number of art lovers were present at the Gallery and from opinions expressed it was evident that all were satisfied with the verdict of the judges who selected the display of oils, water colors, etchings and bronzes.

Mrs. William B. Hill of Baltimore, who is spending the summer at Hawthorne Inn, was the guest of Dr. Mary D. Dakin at luncheon at her home in Magnolia Tuesday.

Miss Elizabeth Leech of Washington, who has spent several summers in Gloucester, will arrive at "The Fairview" the latter part of the month. Miss Leech is a graduate of Smith college in the class of 1918 and has a large circle of friends in the summer colony.

Percy Lee Atherton of Boston is spending a few weeks at Hawthorne Inn, as has been his custom for a number of seasons. Recently Mr. Atherton was the guest of his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Atherton of Washington, who are summering at Hotel Oceanside, Magnolia.

Professor Robinson of the department of Greek and Archaeology of Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, and Mrs. Robinson are among those registered at Hawthorne Inn.

Great has been the interest in the portrait of a girl, painted by Frederick G. Hall, and on exhibition at the Gallery. Mr. Hall, who possesses one of the most artistic and attractive studios on Eastern Point, only recently completed the portrait which has aroused such favorable comment. Strikingly beautiful are the flesh tints which, contrasted with the rich tones of the dress, make the picture one which easily ranks among the first in the portrait group.

Hawthorne Inn guests will be anxious to view the oil painting by Jean Nutting Oliver, who has her studio at the Inn, and which has as its subject the willow bowered entrance to the Hawthorne Inn.

EAST GLOUCESTER

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dunn returned to East Orange, N. J., the latter part of the week. They were registered at Hotel Rockaway.

BASS ROCKS

MID-AUGUST finds the season at its crest, although, truth to tell, there has been little formal social activity outside the dinner parties given prior to the dancing at the clubhouse Saturday night, when Jefferson Johnson and his sturdy jazz artists make the welkin ring with tickletoe dance music and song, these functions being largely and enjoyably attended.

The weather has been so delightful that there has been little indoor entertaining, the appeal of the links and tennis courts or beach and moorland jaunt being irresistible. No better outdoor weather conditions could be conceived. These be rare August days.

Tuesday Mrs. Buck of the cottage colony gave six tables of bridge with 28 at tea. Last Saturday Mrs. Noyes of The Thorwald had two tables of bridge and eleven for tea. The club bridge party for Friday evening, September 2, promises to be the grand end-of-the-summer function.

Mrs. Celeste Hechsher, who has the Cecilia Beaux cottage this season, has as her guests her sister, Mrs. Henry Drayton of Pellyn, Penn., and Miss Celeste Hechsher of Stafford, Penn.

The residence of George E. Tener at Eastern Point has no distinctive name. "Ardarra" is the name of their residence at Sewickley, Penn., and is Celtic for the "Oak on the Hill."

Mrs. Thomas Kelly and Mrs. John Warfield of Chicago are house guests of the Arthur G. Leonards at Eastern Point.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Jones are entertaining at "Moormere," their Eastern Point summer home, Miss Katherine Brown of Sewickley, Penn., and Mr. William Thayer Brown of New York.

"Windover," the summer home of Miss Anne Curtis, is now occupied by F. A. Leovy and family of Pittsburgh, Penn. They have as guest Mr. John Kerr of Montclair, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hyde, who are spending the summer at Hotel Oceanside, were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Brainard at Bass Rocks.

An attractive dinner party including Bass Rocks young people was given the past week by Mr. M. H. B. Paul in honor of Miss Frances Brainard. Those in the party included Mr. Paul, Miss Brainard, Frederick Ballard, Miss Adelaide Brainard, Miss Virginia Seldon, Ira F. Brainard, 2nd, Miss Kate Gray, Miss Winifred Gray, and Alexander Loughlin

ANNISQUAM

THE SEASON draws nigh to September. Contrary to usual custom there will be no Pop concert this year, but instead the end-of-the-season festivity will be the masked ball at the clubhouse, Saturday evening, August 27.

The Saturday afternoon teas at the clubhouse, inaugurated some years ago, continue to be an attractive feature of the colony community life. Last Saturday Mrs. S. H. Hooper presided at the tea serving, with Mrs. William M. Jelly and Mrs. Haxworth at the toast table.

A summer eve of music and drama by the guests of Wonasquam lodge, under the direction of Mrs. Frederick C. Adams of Boston and Mrs. H. L. Wilkins of New York, last Friday evening proved a success from every standpoint. The program was opened with French songs by Miss Victoria Johnson, a talented singer and instructor of Boston, responding to several encores.

Mrs. R. G. Tolmie, a popular young matron of Montreal, presided at the piano, Mrs. Walter A. Draper of Cincinnati gave pleasing solos, Shakespearean scenes were rendered by Mrs. H. L. Wilkins in truly artistic fervor, Mrs. James J. Murphy of Boston gave many piano selections, and the genial hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Shute added greatly to the occasion. The proceeds will be presented by Mr. Shute to the Legion boys for their library.

A very pleasant birthday party was given at Wonasquam Lodge recently to Mrs. L. J. Rogers of Toronto, Can. Covers were laid for twelve and Mrs. Rogers was the recipient of many useful and amusing presents. Mrs. Wells Lathrop of Springfield, also a guest at the Lodge for several seasons, was included in the party, it also being her anniversary.

Arrivals at Wonasquam Lodge: Miss Blanche Polkinhorn, Washington; Mrs. Wm. Delte, Miss Delte, New York; Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Blair, Miss Rachel Blair, Springfield; Miss Arline Hayden, Hartford; Mrs. C. H. Reeves, Miss Eleanor M. Reeves, Miss Mabel E. Reeves, Philadelphia; Geo. A. Smith, Holyoke; Raymond L. Head, Melrose; Allan A. MacDonald, Miss L. A. MacDonald, Newark; Mr. and Mrs. E. Ide Wolfe, Miss Marion Van Rensselaer, Elizabeth; Miss Gertrude M. Small, Mrs. E. F. Morris, Mr. and Mrs. M. McGuire, Raymond McGuire, Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy, Boston; Miss Ethel M. Ward, Miss Olive L. Harris, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bowler, who are spending the season at "Twin Light Manor," have leased a house in Florida for the winter months. Mr. and Mrs. Warick of Englewood, N. J., are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Bowler.

The social calendar for August at Bass Rocks includes a bridge party which will be held on Thursday afternoon, August 25th, at the Bass Rocks Golf clubhouse, under the auspices of St. John's Guild for the benefit of St. John's Episcopal church, Gloucester. Summer residents interested in the affair include Mrs. Jonathan Raymond, Mrs. Alonzo Pollard and Mrs. John Clay of Eastern Point.

Registered at Hotel Moorland, Bass Rocks, are Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Seldon of Washington, Miss Virginia Seldon and Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hubbel and family of Rochester, N. Y.

Among the most attractive residences along this section of the coast is that of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bowler of Worcester. The estate to which the name of "Twin Light Manor" has been given, was purchased some ten years ago and commands a splendid view of the Atlantic ocean and Thatcher's Lights. An open air swimming pool constructed of cement and built on the rocks in front of the estate was completed a year ago and makes an ideal place for the lover of nautical sports.

Rev. Dr. T. McGaw Foster, of the Church of the Messiah, Boston, returned to his Bass Rocks residence on Tuesday. The Rev. Mr. Foster conducts the Bass Rocks Episcopal services each Sunday in the Hawthorne Inn Casino.

Hotel Moorland, at Bass Rocks, is full to its capacity and the season is proving a most successful one at this popular resort. Prominent among its guests are Mrs. Frederick Hild of 52 Lexington avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., and Mr. Harry Weisback, leader of the Chicago Symphony orchestra.

Mrs. I. G. Brainard, who is spending the season at Bass Rocks, was entertained at dinner at "Sunset Hill," the Beverly Farms home of Mrs. W. Harry Brown of Pittsburgh.

Bass Rocks young folk noted at the Saturday evening hop at Hotel Oceanside Saturday included the Misses Adelaide and Frances Brainard and Miss Suzanne McFeely of Hotel Moorland.

Mrs. John B. Drake of Chicago entertained recently her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harry W. Farnum of Magnolia and Hotel Blackstone, Chicago.

A recent guest at dinner at "Craigmoor," the home of Dr. William Jarvis, included Mrs. H. E. Worcester of New York.

tennis tournament, at the end of which the tennis ball was celebrated, formed the chief event of the mid-summer season. The writer hopes that tennis tournaments will again be in vogue at Magnolia and such players as Miss Eleanora Sears, the Davis brothers, Oakes Ames and others of equal merit will again be seen on the courts. Among those who entered the present impromptu tournament were Miss Edith Rosenfield, Hamilton Campbell, Mr. Hasset, Miss Helen Hussey, Mrs. Sidney Small, Mr. Lane, Dr. Dewart, Wm. M. Cornet, Miss Betty Walker, Dr. Bindschelder, Mr. Johnston, Robert Martin, Miss Campbell and Mr. Joseph.

The Sunday evening concerts continue to give joy to music lovers at Hotel Oceanside. The concert a week ago contained many of the late Enrico Caruso's favorites, including "Santa Lucia" and "Celeste Aida" and selections from Pagliacia. Among those present were Miss Caroline Fuller, Miss Mary Patterson, Miss Emily Gray, Mrs. James Green, Mrs. C. F. McMurray and Mrs. G. C. Culbert.

Miss Phylis Hull, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Arthur Hull of Mount Vernon, N. Y., season guests at Hotel Oceanside, is spending the season at camp, but will join her parents later in the season.

Miss Clairette Cazalis of Paris is the guest of Mlle. Breval, who is spending the season at Hotel Oceanside.

Among the attractive dinner parties of the week at Hotel Oceanside was that given by Elias M. Johnson of Spuyten Duyvil, N. Y. Mr. Johnson's guests included Mr. and Mrs. David Loring of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Costello C. Converse and Austin B. Fletcher of Boston.

Registered at Hotel Aborn are Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hines of Needham, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Ehret of New York city, Miss A. M. Robinson, Wm. G. B. Wilson of Philadelphia and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Dunphy of Newark, N. J.

Miss Kathleen Sheriff, who has been spending the week in New York city, is expected to return to Magnolia the latter part of the week. Miss Sheriff's winter home is in Chicago.

William H. Coolidge is among those to represent Magnolia at the Manchester Yacht club, recently becoming a member of this active organization.

Miss Katharine Pillsbury Bragg of Cambridge was the guest of the Misses Marjorie and Marion Dakin over the recent week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Coolidge, who are spending the season at Blynman Farm, gave a dinner the past week in honor of their debutante daughter, Miss Katherine Coolidge. Among those present were Miss Margaret Porter, Miss Mary Hall, Robert Thayer, Thomas Mandell and Geoffry Smith.

Miss Elizabeth Day of Springfield is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Walter Williamson, of Quincy, Ill., at the Adams cottage, one of the Oceanside group.

Miss Iva Rowlett of Palmetto, Fla., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Herbert Dorsey at her Western avenue residence.

Phyllis' Future

Peggy, piquantly demure in black and white, tinkled the ice in her glass and smiled at Phyllis's relatives. Peggy's frock of white Roshanara crepe piped with black was by Lamson & Hubbard and gave her an air of cool distinction from the quaint, square neck—which with its black line directed one's gaze to Peggy's lovely throat—to the hem where Thayer McNeil continued the good work. Peggy's slender ankles displayed their new white drop stitch hose with black polka dots running between the lines, so to speak, and Peggy's proud toes raised Thayer McNeil's white punched quarter pumps, trimmed with black dots to match the stockings, to a height that demanded attention!

I knew that Peggy had something to say to the relatives, but I couldn't let those pumps elevate their toes unnoticed.

"They are works of art, Peggy," I agreed. "'Do they come in black?"

"They are and they do," answered Peggy. "The black patent leathers with white dots and hose to match are even more stunning. I went to Thayer McNeil's this morning because Phil was in one of those moods when he demands 'Smoked Horse Golf Oxfords with Aero Fibre soles.' He got all the dignity and grandeur of cuss words into those titles, but I didn't blame him for wanting sport oxfords that don't get stiff when water soaked, as his other shoes do. These, smoked beefs, or whatever he calls e'm, are washable, and after their flexible soft tan amiability had won his heart, Phil wanted to buy me all the shoe-craft in the shop! So I took these to please him, and a pair of adorable French sandalettes."

"They are all the rage in California," put in Mrs. Donald Leigh, to show that we weren't introducing a new thought to her.

"And in New York," continued Peggy, blandly, "and then as Phil insisted I bought black satin slippers trimmed with gold—to match that dress I got at Hill & Bush's, remember —and black silk stockings with gold clocks, my dear, to chime in the general harmony. But this isn't what I meant to tell you. Phyllis was here this morning and she asked me to inform you that she has 'taken a job'—interior decorating in the cottage a stone's throw from mine. She is going to stop with me until the job is finished."

So that explained my "mystery"! But, after all, why Phyllis, possessed of an independent fortune, should join the I. W. W. was more than I could understand.

Her family evidently shared my perplexity.

"Phyllis," said her sister, "is impossible. A nature like hers is Sinn Feinish in thought and Bolshevixen in action!"

Mrs. Wymess stirred uneasily, "Phyllis is a genius, I'm afraid," she murmured. "Her poor father was always interested in art and even wrote poetry!"

She said it as one who deplores but excuses a fatal family weakness.

"Wouldn't you like to see the house that Phyllis is working on?" asked Peggy, who seemed to be enjoying her inside track immensely. "It's adorable."

We rose—in several bodies—at once and lost no time in getting there. When we arrived Chubby was gravely giving orders to D. C. Ballou concerning gravel for the driveway and Phyllis was deep in consultation with the Gloucester Electric Light Co., from whom she seemed to be ordering everything from washing machines to waffle irons! And as Mrs. Leigh instantly remarked, "What has this to do with Art?"

Phyllis, with her eye for generalship, saw at once that we were a wheel spoking expedition and before we could protest she had us all at work!

Mrs. Wymess found herself in charge of a gas water heater which was to be ordered from the Gloucester Gas Light Co.; Peggy was detailed to "match" china at Hartwell's; Mrs.

Leigh was instructed to direct the placing of furniture that the National House Furnishing Co. was due to bring in at any moment, and I was asked to harmonize Pattillo's cretonnes and Steele & Abbott's wall paper.

"But Phyllis," feebly insisted Mrs. Wymess, "this isn't interior decorating—and who are the people?"

"Friends," came laconically from Phyllis—"known her from infancy—he is an artist—knew him in Paris before the war—Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell." (As Phyllis's mouth was full of pins we overlooked her diction.)

The family seemed cheered—it made it more decent for Phyllis to assist friends.

In the midst of our labors, Marion breezed in, bent on having her latest Farr sweater admired—it was a cobweb weave of reseda green blended with tan, reminiscent of pine forests. She was feeling very important because Mr. Farr—everybody spoils the child—had allowed her to see the "porcelain blue" sweater which Peggy had just had woven to order. "It is a bit of Heaven!" declared Marion.

"Farr's sweaters," assented Phyllis, "combine all five and practical arts, but next time you go ask him to show you the homespun suit that he is making for me—it isn't a 'bit of Heaven,' but it is a bit of heather, and brings back braes and lochs and bonny Scotland. Meanwhile, dear, everyone who enters this house must pay tribute in the form of assisting it to become habitable. McCutcheon has just sent these monogramed comfortables that I ordered, wouldn't you like to open the package?"

Marion opened it as a child unwraps a Christmas gift. "Ready for the cold snap!" she posed with a wonderous silken "puff" over each shoulder, while she held aloft a soft, woolly afghan woven in squares of black and white. "What's this for, Phyllis?"

"Evening dress!" replied Phyllis, with the echo of a "cold snap" in her tone.

Marion then tried to take interior decorating seriously, but her training had been solely along exterior lines—"Mother and I went to Schmidt's to see the new candlesticks—Mother was keen about a pair of crystal and Dutch silver, but I liked a much nicer pair that had figures holding up the candle cups; there were some plain ones, too, that I want for school—and Mr. Schmidt showed us three pairs of old Bohemian glass jars, blue, amber and ruby, with stag and flower designs. Mother thought you might be interested in them, and I asked her if it was because they were so old and rare. Mother laughed—I can't see why—and said, 'Oh, they are Bohemian, too!' "

"Marion," said Phyllis, earnestly, "there are the loveliest hats at Alice Bentley's now. Aunt Cynthia doesn't know the shop, wouldn't you like to escort her over there?"

And thus, in pursuit of fine feathers were two birds of gossip killed with one stone!

However, I was most surprised that Phyllis declared that she needed "to relax and shop for something less wearing than a house" and captured us, bright and early, the next day for assistant buyers in Magnolia.

"We'll begin at Hill & Bush and buy our way to the end of Lexington avenue," she announced threateningly. And she began by indulging in a Cambridge crepe with a sophisticated tomato red overblouse embroidered in white allied to a white skirt of the same crepe.

Peggy was all for the new epon silks embroidered in daring colors, long waisted, and suggesting artless gaiety plus artful simplicity.

Among the evening frocks we saw a changeable, silver-wisteria, pussy-willow silk, trimmed with silver touches and hand made French flowers that made us think of Marion. It was one of those youthful and piquant models that make tunes, like "A Baby in Love," run through my head!

At Slattery's Phyllis hung fire between an evening gown of sapphire blue chiffon over silver, with capricious side drapes of tulle, that had some of the ethereal brightness of the evening star in the blue of an August night, or a gold beaded green chiffon, over a gold foundation, held loosely at the hips with sunlit ribbon and roses and rivaling summer herself! We had to toss up a coin to decide!

Then Peggy got excited over a truly lovely rose chiffon evening wrap with a black fur collar. It was one of those rippling, graceful effects that fall in points to form the indispensible uneven hem-line and enmesh one's desires.

But the Little White Salon was not content with making white magic for summer wear and we were tempted by the "new fall models" and perfectly gorgeous furs. One sable coat lined with silver brocade just makes your heart ache to possess it!

Phyllis complained that she had been rudely parted from coats last shopping tour and ,perforce, we found ourselves back at Manahan's, where Peggy was all for a blue velour trimmed with Krimmer fur, when Phyllis' wandering eye came upon a wondrous French coat—a Jungman model. The bottom of the coat was of black Cashia cloth, which ran up the back ending in a point at the neck. The top and sleeves were of beautiful Caracul fur.

The House of Manahan were exhibiting with characteristic and dashing abandon! Toujours en avant! seems to be their motto. We lost our heads to a stone-blue and silver chiffon velvet gown. The silver bodice of dull grey was decorated with silver and blue beads. The skirt—but words fail when I try to describe this illusive model, its folds were full of mystery. And there was a lovely black duvetyn hat to go with it. It seems so nice to have the trimming—which in this case was a drooping festoon of goose feathers—on the right side for a change. The slightly rolling narrow brim on the left side was very becoming to Phyllis' profile. There were other lovely things so intriguing that choice was a mere matter of fancy.

When we stopped at Lamson &

Hubbard's to pet the furs, Miss Farrell told us to wait until the week of September 1st to see the newest autumn models. She was a little tantalizing, standing there with a twinkle in her eye, and telling us that the new fall models of dresses were "in"—well she knows that her serial story tactics get us all excited! But first we must see the hats. There was a close fitting blue velvet hat with a fascinatng ostrich plume, curling over the side, "burnt" as it started and "natural" color to match the hat as it terminated in fluffy waves. And there were delightfully chic black, and black and white tailored models in leather.

Our concentration was disturbed by the vision of a stunning Callot model in orchid crepe satin which, in the intricate art of its simple draping, transported one to ancient Greece via modern Paris. We kindly allowed Peggy to secure it for her very own.

At McCutcheon's Phyllis seemed to scorn household things and reveled in exquisite "undies"—gowns of webfine nainsook, scalloped and Philippine hand embroideries in dainty dots and original designs, and intimate garments of shell pink crepe de chine, every stitch hand sewn, and fairly bridal in their appeal!

"Phyllis," I teased, "why not leave something for your trousseau"—

Peggy, laughingly, cut me short, remarking, "Anne, old dear, what makes you so ready to throw rice? Every woman knows that a mere husband, and a new one at that, can never appreciate this fairy-fine handwork, so why waste it on the banal trousseau?"

Meanwhile Phyllis, with a deaf ear and a flushed cheek turned toward us, continued to invest in that glove silk wear which is—literally—nearest a woman's heart.

I suppose Marion, given my chances to observe, would have detected "something up," but I'll confess that two days later, when Peggy showed me Chubby's telegram I just gasped openly—It read: "Gone to New York with Phyllis. Will return Saturday on the 10:00 train." And, before I had time to revive, in walked a frantic aunt waving a telegram from Phyllis saying, "Gone to New York with Chubby. Will return with husband on the 10:00

"Why should they elope?" moaned her aunt. "We all approve of Mr. Chelton, and, in any case, there is no one who could stop Phyllis from marrying anyone she pleased. I heard a rumor that she was seen in New York a short time ago with Mr. Chubby and that they were looking at wedding rings at Gorham's. I came here immediately, but Phyllis wouldn't confide in me and this is what comes of Art!"

She pressed Peggy, as the last person who had been in contact with Phyllis, to explain her conduct, but Peggy was wide eyed innocence.

Marion was simply heart broken when we told her the solution of her "mystery." "We have been robbed of a wedding by a fat man!" she railed. "Phyllis would have made a heavenly bride, but I don't wonder she didn't want to parade with a tub like Chubby! If anyone had listened to me! I foresaw it all! But how shall I ever live until Saturday?"

That last cry found an echo in our hearts. We all felt profoundly curious to see Phyllis and Chubby, but we didn't know just what to do by way of welcome. Even Aunt Lida said that she didn't know whether to go to Schmidt's and buy a wedding present, or wait to see if there was a "catch to it."

Needless to say it was a goodly fellowship of friends who lined up to meet (more than!) the train on Saturday, and who gasped as Phyllis and Chubby assisted a tall, thin officer—very merry of eye, but lame of leg—to crutch his way into our hearts.

Phyllis and Chubby kissed everybody carelessly and their joint conversation ran something like this: "Peter Maxwell—yes, the Captain Maxwell—married when he was in the hospital—good time to marry a soldier when he's down—yes, last time we went to New York—Chubby was best man—thought anyone could understand our telegrams—beautiful weather we're having"—

After we had settled them in the adorable cottage, wept, laughed, and left them, we all reeled over to Peggy's house and congratulated ourselves on having suspected it all along! Chubby was the star reporter.

"It's THE Peter Maxwell, who made a habit of being decorated in the war," confided Chubby. "Phyllis met him in Paris years ago, he sculpts or something, anyway 'The Studio' publishes articles about his 'Marvelous Promise'."

"Phyllis is original," remarked Mrs. Wymess, "one really couldn't expect her to get married in the usual way and it would have been trying for Peter's leg. Wasn't it like her to say that the trip to New York 'had to do with her future'?"

Marion and Jimmy took it out by writing to the Cape Ann Shore—Jimmy's was a news item concerning the arrival of the famous couple, but Marion's was free verse—Jimmy told her solemnly that only free verse was ever accepted by community magazines—beginning with startling originality.

But Peggy and I just looked at each other and smiled as befitted matrons.

GRENFELL BALL

The fancy dress ball to be given at the Hawthorne Casino Inn on the evening of August 26 in aid of the Dr. Grenfell mission promises to be quite an affair. Plans are under way to make this ball the big event of its kind in this section and many of the North Shore society element are planning to be present. The affair will be under the direction of Miss Katherine Pollard and Miss Kate Stanwood, both of whom have been in Labrador with Dr. Grenfell as workers at the mission. Among the special features will be Senia Russakoff, a well known Russian ballet master, who will bring his ballet and give exhibitions during intermission. Many of the officers of the mine fleet are expected to be present in uniform and lend a touch of color to the scene.

Tickets will be on sale at the various clubs and hotels along the shore, and tables and tickets may be procured by writing to Miss Katherine Pollard at Eastern Point, Gloucester. The list of patronesses includes Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard, Mrs. James Proctor, Mrs. George von L. Meyer, Miss Rosamond Bradley, Mrs. John W. Prentiss, Mrs. F. S. Whitwell, Mrs. W. S. Paine, Mrs. W. W. Caswell, Mrs. Joseph Woods, Mrs. Paul Moore, Mrs. John S. Curtis, Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Mrs. William Coolidge, Mrs. John Clay, Mrs. A. F. Sortwell, Mrs. Frederick Hall, Mrs. I. Week at Marblehead One of the Most Satisfactory for Years—Squam Fishes Defeat Marbleheaders Decisively.

There was no racing at Squam Saturday or Sunday, the boats participating in the races at Marblehead during the week. Most of the fleet were towed down Saturday night but decided not to race Sunday.

The week at Marblehead is considered the best from the point of weather experienced for many years. The fleet participated in all of the racing from Tuesday through Saturday and came away well satisfied.

In the team races, the scoring being by points, the Fishes won decisively by more than two to one over the same class of boats in the Marblehead division, which speaks volumes for the able seamen of Squam who man this fleet.

In the Birds, R. Russell Smith in the Auk won the honors, scoring three firsts, with Jack Hooper in the Tern second, with one first and three seconds.

Wesley Pear in the Cat class also came off with flying colors, landing four firsts; Fred Hawkins getting two seconds.

In the Fishes A. Hastings in the Bluefish, Sumner Andrew in the Ray and A. A. Morrison in the Sanddab each won a first and the sail-off will be at Squam.

I notice that an attempt is being made to revive yachting at East Gloucester or, to be more exact, at Eastern Point. Three boats, the "Midgets" Philistie, Philip Tucker; Gatino, E. Williams, and the Midget, Frederick G. Hall, comprise the fleet at present. Races are sailed weekly and from this nucleus it is hoped to revive what was once a major sport at East Gloucester. It is hoped that this fleet will be greatly increased and the sport be up to its par of former years.

The East Gloucester, formerly the Gloucester Yacht club, had an adequate and satisfactory headquarters at Rocky Neck, but from causes which were not obvious to the writer the interest in what was a most flourishing organization fell off and at the oncoming of the war the time was opportune, in general deference to public opinion, to call off the races.

As anticipated, after the war the interest still farther lagged and the club property sold. It is a matter of regret that the exigencies of the occasion rendered this move imperative. No better vantage point for a clubhouse could be secured.

This is true of the courses. The courses plotted down the outer bay and outside to the point to the whistling buoy across the mouth of the harbor to Norman's Woe, were in sight of nearly all Eastern Point and Rocky Neck and were readily followed from the shore with glasses. Everything is at hand here to make a most desirable yachting center.

Commodore John Greenough was a generous friend of the club, in fact, made the erection of the clubhouse possible. In its yacht racing membership were combined desirably the permanent and summer residents and among these were a number of women sailors who lent a touch of the picturesque to the races. Magnolia, having no club, also sent its representatives.

Above all sports on the seaboard, yachting demands encouragement in the public interest. Alone it furnishes a schooling for the desirable young men in all classes to obtain that knowledge of the sea that will qualify them as officer material for the navy in case of war with a seapower. This was demonstrated in the recent war, when the yachtsmen of the naval reserve came forward in large numbers and proved an important factor in the struggle.

So we hope the East Gloucester Yacht club will be revived to its old-time importance and resume its former position as one of the major yacht clubs of the Massachusetts bay coast.

Shortly before the war, Commodore John Greenough gave the correspondent of the Boston Globe an interview, which was published in that paper, which was the cause of the establishment of the Town landing at the junction of Main, Rogers and Commercial streets, or rather the utilization of a town landing disused and encroached upon for other purposes.

Prior to that there was no available public landing. Proprietors of private landings reaped a good living catering to this need, but the commanders of warships and yachts, making the harbor headquarters, found it an expensive proposition.

Accordingly, at a meeting at the Army and Navy club in New York some of these naval men and yacht owners resolved that if a public landing were not furnished they would pass by this port on their cruises. This decision was made public in the authorized interview referred to.

The result was effective immediately. Although there was the usual demur by interested parties who wanted the landing in another place, the city authorities took heed of the preference for this location, removed obstructions and fitted it for its purpose.

The Mine fleet has made this port headquarters this last summer and this season. Capt. Lackey, commanding this fleet, says that no place on the New England coast has as fine a landing place. It is sheltered, convenient to the business section and has a building which is used as headquarters for the men. It abuts on a large square, in which two thousand men can be landed and formed, as was the case in the Legion parade on Independence day. A further need is the dredging of a channel from the harbor line, which can be done at slight expense.

This fleet has left many thousands of dollars in the coffers of Gloucester business men during the summer and coming in the season of a business slump has proved a welcome financial lift. It is a matter of doubt whether the fleet would have made this port its base if this landing place had not been afforded, for a vital necessity is that of shore communication. And this accommodation is open to all who have sail or motor craft.

So to the action of Commodore Greenough in giving out this interview may be ascribed the establishment of the landing which is now a public fixture.

portant modifications, became the Federal Reserve act.

Colonel Andrew came to Washington as director of the mint in 1909, after a long collegiate career in the course of which, as student and professor, he had specialized in fiscal economics. Highly educated both in America and Europe, where he studied at Halle, Berlin and Paris, he had served as assistant professor of economics at Harvard and already had won not as a writer upon economic questions. As director of the mint he instituted many reforms in the administration of affairs which saved the government a great deal of money besides adding to the efficiency of his bureau. It was wholly characteristic of Colonel Andrew that at one time, when the question arose as to the integrity of the sacred brass Troy pound which is a fundamental standard of weight in this country, Colonel Andrew should cooly pick it up from its hallowed resting place in the Philadelphia mint, put it in his suit case and bring it to Washington to have it tested at the Bureau of Standards. The thing was sacrilegious, from the point of view of some gentlemen, but Colonel Andrew wanted to know what the thing weighed and abruptly proceeded to find out. It is not on record that the sacred object was at all damaged by its journey.

After a brief but busy service as director of the mint Colonel Andrew was appointed assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of fiscal affairs under Secretary Franklin MacVeagh. About this time congress had instituted the National Monetary commission, for the purpose of devising a plan to prevent a recurrence of the currency panics which periodically had afflicted the country through lack of elasticity in the circulating medium. Senator Aldrich was chairman of the committee on finance and chairman also of the commission and it was the dream of his later life to institute a new banking system which should stand all strain. Mr. Aldrich determined to crown his public service with a work that should stand as a monument to his name. But Senator Aldrich, with all his great experience in tariff and financial affairs, lacked the profound scholarship necessary to the formulation of a new banking system for the United States, and in the emergency he turned to Colonel Andrew.

It was under these circumstances that Colonel Andrew became the executive officer of the National Monetary commission. One of the members on the part of the House was John W. Weeks, now secretary of war. Another was Joseph W. Bailey, then a senator from Texas. When the commission was first appointed Bailey went into it breathing fire against its purposes. He conceded it to be a scheme of the devil, or rather of the devils of "Wall Street," whom he suspected of operating through the commission to place the yoke of financial slavery upon the necks of the American people. As the studies of the commission proceeded, Bailey softened, as he began to appreciate the breadth and scope of the work. To make a long story short, when the work of the commission was ended, and the final report was made, it had no more enthusiastic supporter than Joseph W. Bailey of Texas.

Colonel Andrew went to Europe as agent of the commission and there assembled a collection of data of inestimable value for the purpose in hand. As a result of this investigation, including the tour of Europe by Colonel Andrew, some forty volumes of the publications of the commission were issued which constituted the most comprehensive library of the world's banking ever written or compiled.

This was the purpose and plan of the Monetary commission or so-called Aldrich bill for the creation of a Federal Reserve banking system. Had the republicans continued in power, no doubt the bill would have been enacted substantially as it was drafted. But the Taft administration was on its last legs and the democratic leaders were determined that the republicans should not take the credit for a reform of the currency system. The Aldrich plan contemplated a single bank to be controlled by bankers, on the theory of Grover Cleveland that the government should not engage in the banking business. The democrats substituted government for bankers' control, and they also played politics with the measure by insisting that Federal Reserve banks should be scattered all over the country. But the whole structure of the Federal Reserve system was formulated by the Monetary commission; and the executive who did most of the formuating was Colonel A. Piatt Andrew. BRIGHAM.

FISHERMEN'S MEMORIAL

Gloucester is pre-eminently a fishing port and it is only natural that she should honor the men of the fleet lost at sea by a special Memorial service. Each year the sea claims a number of men and while the losses are not so severe as they were years ago, the conditions that a fisherman meets in his occupation are such that out of a large number of men engaged some are certain to find their graves in the Atlantic. This service will be held next Sunday, August 21, at 2.30 P.M.

The Fishermen's Memorial service attracts thousands of people, many from the summer population along the shore, doubtless because of that sympathy which goes out to a class of men exposed to exceptional hazards, and also because of the beauty and solemnity of the service. Probably nowhere in this part of the country is there anything like this Fishermen's Memorial, held under the auspices of the Gloucester Fishermen's Institute, and its development into one of the most beautiful and dignified ceremonies has been the result of years of experience. From time to time changes have been made, new features added and everything done to make the ceremony distinctive while retaining its simplicity.

All who would like to contribute flowers for the occasion are urged to do so. They should be left at the Community House between 1 and 2 p. m., Sunday, August 21st.

The services will be under the auspices of the Gloucester Fisherman's Institute, Col. Charles F. Wonsen, officer of the day.

At 2:30 p. m. a procession headed by the Maine band, will march from the Community House to the band stand at Stage Fort park. The invocation will be by Rev. Geo. E. Russell, chaplain of the Institute; address by Rev. Edgar W. Davis, chaplain, U. S. N., U. S. S. San Francisco; reading of the roll of the dead by Newman Shea, agent of the Fishermen's Union; saxophone solo, "Elegy," Andrew A. Jacobson; Memorial prayer, Rev. Dr. Albert A. Madsen; after which the assemblage will proceed to Blynman bridge, where school children will strew the water with flowers, and there will be singing, "Scatter Flowers on the Waves," by Mary Brooks, under direction of B. Merrill Hopkinson, M. D., concluding with "taps."

NEAR EAST RELIEF

Prof. Herbert L. Willett and Haratune Tashjian, of the Near East Relief organization, who will be on the program with Bishop Philip M. Rhinelander at the Near East meeting to be held at the Beverly Farms Baptist church, Sunday afternoon (tomorrow), August 21st, at 5 o'clock, have personal stories to tell of experiences in Turkey. Mr. Willett was a professor in the American college of Beirut during the three most tragic years, and was one of those who sought to organize American relief when the native Christians were found to be starving to death.

Mr. Tashjian came to this country as a young man, and, after studying here, left to go as a missionary under Dr. James L. Barton. He served his people for fifteen years. He was condemned to death with 800 Armenians, but escaped miraculously and traveled half way round the world with his family before reaching the United States.

These men will briefly tell their stories, after the Bishop has made the main address of the evening. Hon. Augustus P. Loring will preside, and a number of residents along the North Shore have consented to serve as sponsors for this meeting.

H. C. Jacquith, of Darien, Conn., now director of the Near East Relief overseas organization, has just reported to the national relief headquarters in New York. What he says is so comprehensive that a special edition of "East and West" is warranted to get these latest statements before the people of Massachusetts, who are constantly asking questions concerning the need and use of the money which they so generously give. Mr. Jacquith says:

"The next few months are going to bring increased suffering to regions where conditions are already so bad that it doesn't seem possible for them to get any worse. There is need throughout all the areas in which we are operating—in Syria, Mesopotamia, the Caucasus, and Anatolia; but the situation in Transcaucasia, as indicated by the reports from workers in these regions that are coming into Constantinople, seems to be the most serious. Here, we are responsible for the lives of approximately 35,000 children, who must be brought up until they reach maturity, if the vast amount of money that has already been paid out by the American people is not going to have been given in vain. Besides the children, a large refugee population, whose fields have been devastated by invasion and whose cattle have been carried off, must be cared for until new crops can be planted and new livestock obtained.

"If the American people could only see what they have already accomplished, I am sure that they would be determined to see through to completion the task that they have so well begun."

THE CURIOSITY SHOP

At 32 Main street is established the Gloucester Curiosity and Antique Shop, which is teeming with "antiques," furniture, crockery, andirons, pictures, swell-front bureaus, old bedsteads, and a thousand and one articles dear to the antiquarian and collector.

All these are genuine and all were collected in Essex county and an inspection will well repay the lover of the olden time furnishings and furniture.

There are some very desirable pieces to be had of a kind and quality which are becoming scarcer each year.

Mr. Lanigan, the proprietor, is an antique collector of years standing and is an expert in his particular line. Thirty-two Main street is at the western end of the town near the Community house.

ART IN GLOUCESTER

Continuation This Week of Exhibition at Gallery-on-the-Moors

The art exhibits are the outgrowth of work begun here years ago by such men as Childe Hassam, Frank Duveneep, William Morris Hunt, John Sloane, Joseph DeCamp, Joseph Pennell, Robert Henrix and Randall Davy and others. It was these men who "discovered" this American Venice and delighted in work here for years.

Robert Henri, John Sloane and Randall Davy went to New Mexico and in and about Santa Fe have uncovered another place with much interesting material for the painters. A colony, similar to Gloucester, is growing there and we find these artists using both places as artists' retreats.

Many of these in working here, in the olden days, lived at the "Harbor View" and even today, historic seekers seek out the artists' room there today. They find sketches and landscapes on the walls of this room by men who since have gained world fame.

Jonas Lie is represented at the Gallery-on-the-Moors by a masterful harbor scene, "When the Boats Come In." He puts life into these fishermen by having an intimate insight into character. The picture is alive and a vital thing.

Hayley-Lever shows great strength in the powerful portrayal of the high and rugged English coast in the St. Ives harbor. He never loses his individuality in composition and power in portrayal.

Louis Kronberg, who spent last year in Spain, painting Spanish figures, the dancers and gypsies, shows in this exhibit one of his pastel-like ballet girls, in a pale blue color. It is done with a graceful sense of color and tone, delicacy in technique and force of mind. The portrait of a "Spanish Dancer," exhibited in Paris, won for Mr. Kronberg a membership in "Societie Nationale des Beaux Arts" in Paris this spring.

Hugh Breckenridge of the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts, who has a summer school here on "Rocky Neck," East Gloucester, exhibits a marvelous color feat and composition in a still life, "A Japanese Jar." It has un-

THE NORTH WOODS

Do you know the fragrance of wood-smoke at evening?
Have you heard the sound of the loon as it cries?
Do you know its laughter—its mad, sad laughter
That screams o'er the water, and dies?

Have you watched the smoke-rings curl upwards
Till lost in the shadows o'erhead,
Where the white-throated sparrow
Sings farewell till the morrow
And the last lingering sunbeam is sped?

I know of no greater panacea for a tired body and weary brain than a journey into the wilds. Not the nearby woods—one feels that one can get back to civilization then, but into the trackless forests, where one's progress is along the paths cut by waters, along the streams that hurdle their ways over and between rocks.

Sometimes one travels for hours without finding a place big enough to set up a tent at night. But when the place is found, what relief!

One can not have food till it is cooked—it can't be cooked till a fire is built—a fire can't be made till wood is cut, and no sound is more grateful than the hack of the axe against the tree and the crash of the tree as it falls. Not yet can we have fire (Jove's first gift to man). The tree must be cut into bits. Will we ever be less hungry? We watch the chips fly. Then, with what excitement we watch the first curling smoke, the first burst of flame.

Then to the lake for water, which soon begins to sputter. Our daily bread has to be made and put into the baker sheet. What if we should forget it and let it blacken! No supper!

Then kneeling in the smoke and burning our cheeks and hands, we sizzle some entrancing smelling bacon and delectable potatoes. If that, too, should burn!! There's no other to be had. We have all the elements of tragedy without a metropolitan stage.

At last, all is ready, and oh! how good it is. Simple, simple things, but could a weary brain find greater rest, and a tired body greater refreshment?

"Do you know the fragrance of wood-smoke at evening?
Have you heard the sound of the loon as it cries?"

—Emogene Mahoney.

SILVER—A CONNECTING LINK WITH THE PAST

Recent exhibits of Gorham sterling silver along the North Shore have called attention to the fact that to New England must be awarded the honor of being the home and center of silversmithing. It was a fortunate thing, judging by the history of silver as reviewed today, that this new art was started at a period when work in silver in England had about reached its zenith.

As early as 1620 there was silversmithing in this country. Thomas Howard registered as such when he landed at Jamestown with the arrivals of that year. In 1634 John Mansfield was working in Charlestown, Mass. A few years later John Noyes of Boston created a furore by introducing to the early colonists silver handled forks with steel prongs. He lived between 1674 and 1749. These forks are preserved in the Boston Museum.

Possibly inspired by the success of Noyes in producing forks, silversmiths began to multiply and very beautiful work they put out. Colonial tables boasted teapots, coffee pots, cups, tureens, pitchers, sugar bowls and platters of solid silver. Tankards of generous sizes still in existence bear witness to the fact that Volstead would not have been popular in revolutionary days. Silver salt cellars, frequently lined with colored glass, were quite in vogue.

Among the pieces handed down are lovely porringers and two pieces—now obsolete, the potato ring and the muffiniere. The potato ring was ring of pierced silver, large enough to encircle a moderate sized platter and hold in place a mound of baked or boiled potatoes. The muffiniere may be called the progenitor of the salt cellar, except that it was used for sugar and not for salt.

From 1650 to 1730 some excellent designs were produced, especially in spoons. One much prized by collectors has the trefoil handle with monogram on the back.

A singularly interesting class of men were those early silversmiths. Tradition yet hovers over the name of Miles Gorham, who lived and labored for 90 years in New Haven, Conn. Silversmithing must have run in the Gorham family, for in 1792 Jabez Gorham started to work in Providence

MEMORIES

Between the oak trees.
The apple boughs crack with crimson fruit.
Dead leaves swirl high, on the sun-bleached road.

Tomorrow—when I am gone—shall some unseeing country lad,
Blow on his mittened hands and curse the frost?
Shall the shadows creep forgotten, down the lane,
To a deserted orchard?

—Natalie Hays Hammond.

ROCKPORT ART EXHIBIT

The Rockport Art association's initial exhibition was most auspiciously opened Wednesday and there was a large attendance of summer residents and the townspeople. Iced tea was served with other dainties by Mrs. H. A. Vincent, Mrs. Tom Barnet and Mrs. William Hease.

About one hundred pictures were hung, including oils, water colors, pastels, drawings and etchings. The hanging committee displayed commendable skill, considering the fact that there is so wide a range of mediums. As no solicitations were made, the jury was free to consider everything wholly upon merit and many advanced students, whose work was up to the standard, had an opportunity to make their initial exhibit. This broad policy makes this show interesting, as new talent and new methods are introduced.

The subjects range from Margeson's large marine on the center of the easterly wall to Hubbard's and Stevens' on the west wall, hung with every consideration for harmony and proportion.

usual width and sweep in his frank handling of his decorative and color ability.

Felice Howell has painted Chestnut street in old Salem as it really is—with its own lovely atmosphere, and not even for a moment let some other or foreign feeling creep in. The street scene, with its wonderful old houses, shaded by stately elms and the sun playing with shadows over the whole, is a delightful, as well as perfect composition.

H. A. Vincent of New York and Rockport displays a canvas, "Low Tides," in which every change of light and color, in that soft light, stands out. It is a poetical piece and misty mysteries seem to surround the fishing sailboats.

Another splendidly created boat study is "The Ginny Fleet," by Alice Worthington Ball of Baltimore. She is a finished draftsman, has a simple manner of work, yet seems to follow up and get the most out of a motive.

A. H. Hibbard's "New Hampshire Village" is a typical New England winter scene in a village buried with snow at the foot of the mountains. He has a shrewd knowledge of nature and recreated it on canvas.

In water color, Olive Rush and Gertrude Bourne have shown some of their western studies. Miss Rush has revealed the quality of feeling and poetry surrounding the old "Adobe Houses" of Toas, N. M. She paints in a subtle style and color of unforgetable beauty. Miss Bourne has given us "Mt. Adams and Madison" in dark, deep tones of the valley and timberland contrasted to the snow capped peaks. She has a very definite and vigorous technique that carries well in such compositions.

E. Parker Nordell shows a "Still Life" for a panel decoration in opaque water color. In construction of mass, form and luscious color and with proper details to balance the whole, she has produced one of the finest pieces of work in the exhibition.

Harry de Maines' "Woodblock Prints", are delightfully delicate and charming compositions.

Some of the best etchers are represented in the work of Lester Hornby, Carl J. Nordell, William Meyerwitz, Frederick G. Hall, Gilbert Adrain shows some wonderful pen drawings, done after the manner of Bakst, the Russian artist, in his production of figures and costumes for Pavlowa.

THAT'S GLOUCESTER

Curving bay and rocky shores—
That's Gloucester.
Gleaming sands and sweeping moors—
That's Gloucester.
Wooded hills and dappled dells,
Salt sea air and fishy smells,
Children playing with sea shells—
That's Gloucester.

Tides that come and tides that go—
That's Gloucester.
Ships of state and schooners slow—
That's Gloucester.
Mistiness of sea and sky,
And sunset blazing red on high,
As summer days go gliding by—
That's Gloucester.

Raging storms and heavy gales—
That's Gloucester.
Struggling ships and slanting sails—
That's Gloucester.
Cosy hearths and outstretched hands
Welcome men from many lands,
Binding all with loving bands—
That's Gloucester.

COMMUNITY DRAMATIC SCHOOL

The entertainment at the Community Dramatic School last Saturday began with a performance of Susan Glaspell's "Trifles," with the following cast:

"TRIFLES"

By Susan Glaspell

George Henderson....Mr. Edgecome
Henry Peters.....Robert Goode
Lewis Hale.....Seaverns Hilton
Mrs. Peters.....Solvig Winslow
Mrs. Hale.....Grace Robinson

"Trifles" is a difficult play to act because it depends so much on a close simulation of natural speech. As the "dry light" of common day is so notoriously hard to reproduce on the stage, it is an achievement indeed, that the school was able to catch it in so large a measure. More than that, the actors more than once gave a fine thrill and lift of emotion. Miss Robinson's "Mrs. Hale" had an especial genuineness we should like to mention. As an entr'acte, Mrs. Standish Smith played Cyril Scott's "Danse Negre," and Mr. Edgecome recited Richard Harding Davis' "The Zone Police," which was followed by "'Op o' my Thumb," a play of the usual London slavey stuff of aitches dropped with conscious care, by the following cast:

"'OP O' MY THUMB"

Celeste.....Elizabeth Bartlett
Clem Galloway.....Lillian Plonk
Amanda.....Margaret Lyle
Horace Greensmith.....Jack Rauber

Miss Bartlett's Celeste had a gum-chewing license of gesture that helped things greatly in so conventional a play. —A. H. M.

SILVER—A CONNECTING LINK WITH THE PAST

and in 1820 John Gorham was carrying on the work started a generation before. In this connection it may be said that the Gorham plant at Providence today is upholding the same standards set by the early members of the family.

Very recently this organization comprising the factory at Providence and others in New England launched a campaign that carries with it a direct appeal to the American woman to think in terms of solid silver when starting her home or making gifts.

The sense of family continuity, so encouraged by the possession of heirlooms, seems to be passing away. Silver for a thousand years has been a connecting link with the past, so it is not only an investment for the moment, but an investment for the future, as Miss Marguerite Walker Jordan, who is in charge of the Gorham exhibits points out. When other heirlooms—less stable—have gone the way of all things, great-great grandmothers tea service, or spoons, or whatever still survives, will call forth a thrill of family pride as they appear on the tables of the next century.

A TARKINGTON EVENING

Tableaux From Ten Booth Tarkington Novels and Plays Given at Moorland Casino

An evening devoted to Booth Tarkington's novels and plays, through the medium of pictures, impersonated by members of the Moorland Dramatic club, was arranged and directed by Mrs. Ovid Butler Jameson (Mr. Tarkington's sister) of the Moorland hotel on Saturday evening.

It was a delightful review of his work from the days of gay "Beaucaire" and "The Gentleman From Indiana" to the present "Clarence" and "Alice Adams," that vivid story of town life which is being read and discussed from many angles.

The stage setting of rich, deep color and the lighting effects gave the figures an excellent background. Each set of pictures were in costumes of the period—from the days of satins, laces and buckles to the simple modern dress.

Music, adapted to each picture, and used at the theatre productions, was played admirably by a stringed orchestra.

Pierrot and Pierette, in domino costumes, danced on the stage and gave the prologue, which carried the audience to realms of fantasy and reality. This charming part was written by Mrs. Jameson.

The "Penrod" series of pictures were created by twelve children with youthful spirit and charm.

"Seventeen" came in for its usual responsive audience.

"The Gentleman from Indiana" brought back pictures in a most vivid manner of politics and white caps of twenty years ago.

"Clarence," which ran so successfully in New York for two years, brought forth the usual merriment and applause.

"The Two Van Revels" were scenes of the romantic days of gentlemen with ruffled cravats and capes and beautiful ladies of hoops and curls.

"Alice Adams" proved to be realistic pictures of the unpopular girl of the small town of today, and was well done.

"The Beautiful Lady" was reminiscent of days of Tennysonian beauty and fashion.

"Monsieur Beaucaire," that delightful romance, was a brilliant climax to end the program. The orchestra played the "Overture" from the opera and different motives throughout the scenes.

Mrs. J. Sidney Burnett of Chicago, a lyric soprano, sang beautifully "The Red Rose" song, which has been a favorite for two years. Four couples in splendid costumes, as lords and ladies, danced the ever picturesque Minuet to the music of Mozart's "Don Juan." The program:

Prologue: Pierette, Miss Helen Colbert; Pierrot, Harry Strong.

Pictures from "Penrod"; Penrod, Reeve Lewis, Jr.; Sam, James Remick, Jr.; Marjery Jones, Miss Constance Brewer; Fanchon, Miss Louise McLaren.

Reading from "The Gentleman from Indiana": J. Sidney Burnet.

Pictures from "The Gentleman from Indiana": John Harkless, DeWitt C. Poole; Helen Sherwood, Mrs. Edward C. Parsons; White Cap—Bob Skillet, Frank Baker; Schubert's Serenade, sung by Mrs. W. R. Bassett.

Pictures from "Clarence": Clarence, S. Burton Fisher; Cora, Miss Betty Burnet; Mrs. DeLancey, Mrs. Henry Bradshaw Welsh; Mr. DeLancey, J. Sidney Burnet.

Pictures from "The Two Van Revels": Tom Van Revel, Whitmore Slayten; Betty Carew, Miss Betty Thompson; Edith Madrillon, Miss Dorothy Wilson; Sister Cecilia, Mrs. Harry Clay Primrose; Curley Gray, Richard Thompkins; Song, "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms," Carter Wilder.

Pictures from "Alice Adams": Alice Adams, Mrs. Percival Smith; Mrs. George Dresser, Miss Aileen M. McDonald; Mr. Arthur Russell, John H. Gray; Song, "Just For a Day," Mrs. J. Sidney Burnet.

Pictures from "The Beautiful Lady": Mrs. Howard S. Bremond, DeWitt C. Poole.

Monsieur Beaucaire: Reading, Mrs. Fitzhugh Sargent; Monsieur Beaucaire, Booth Tarkington Jameson; Duke of Winterset, Charles Edwards; Lady Mary Carlisle, Miss Helen Colbert; Lady Lucie Sylvester, Miss Kate E. Gray; Lady Clarissa Lovejoy, Miss Margaret Brooks; Lady Elizabeth Brent, Miss Elizabeth Casanave; Sir William Basteau, Robert T. Gray; Sir Hugh Molyneaux, John Dolan; Sir Harry Townbrake, Lea Brainerd.

Songs from opera, "Monsieur Beaucaire": 1. "The Red Rose"; 2. "Give Me a Rose," Mrs. J. Sidney Burnet; dance, Minuet.

Committee: Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Miss Eloise Sargent, Mrs. John Gray, Mrs. William Dyer, Mrs. Henry B. Welsch, Mrs. John McGaw Foster, Mrs. Ovid Butler Jameson.

COMMUNITY PLAYS

Wednesday was the opening night of the second group of plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors, which was largely attended, the various portrayals being favorably received. The presentations will continue next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

COL. PRENTISS' GENEROSITY

The beautiful mansion of Col. John W. Prentiss at Brace's Cove, Eastern Point, is nearly completed and is unquestionably the finest residence on this section of the North Shore, fairly baronial architecturally and in its furnishings.

Large signs stating that the public is invited to traverse the grounds at will bespeak the public spirited generosity of Col. Prentiss, who desires to share with the world the beauties of this magnificent seashore domain. Such an offering will, unquestionably, be availed of in a manner that will show that the public fully appreciates this large hearted hospitality. Col. Prentiss and his family expect to eat their Thanksgiving dinner in their new home.

TO MY LADY IN SEARCH OF THE DISTINCTIVE

MAGNOLIA

THE Magnolia Swimming Pool was the scene of a merry party the past week, when Henry Rowe, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Prescott Rowe, gave a masquerade party in honor of the younger set at Magnolia. The costumes were unique and charming. The first prize was awarded Miss Frances Dewart, who made a most charming prince. Miss Betty Walker, daughter of Mrs. J. Harrington Walker, took the second prize as a Spanish dancer. The prize for the most unusual costume went to Nat Lane, who as a bathing girl was most captivating. Mr. and Mrs. E. Prescott Rowe and Mr. and Mrs. Otis Weld Richardson were the chaperones of the affair.

The tennis tournament recently held at the Oceanside hotel was brought to a successful close the first of the week. The winners included Miss Edith Rosenfield, Mrs. Sidney Small, Miss Frances Campbell and Dr. William R. P. Emerson.

Mrs. John Sharman Zinsser of Hastings-on-Hudson and infant son, Wadsworth Zinsser, are the guests of Mrs. Zinsser's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, Jr., at their cottage in Oakes Feld.

Magnolia harbor has been an attractive setting for Wasaka III, the beautiful yacht owned by J. J. Martin of Boston. Mr. Martin and family, who are guests at Hotel Oceanside, have held a number of informal gatherings aboard the craft the past fortnight.

Mrs. C. A. Anthony and daughter, Miss Helen Anthony of Jersey City, N. J., are guests at Hotel Oceanside. Miss Anthony will return to Smith college in September, where she will begin her studies for a master's degree in geology.

Among the birthdays that were celebrated in a delightfully informal manner the past week were those of Gray and Almira Foster, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Foster of Coolidge Point. Both birthdays came within two days of each other and a sailing party, bonfire and picnic were some of the interesting features of the day.

Miss Helen Drake, who has been in Chicago for several weeks, will be the guest of her sister, Mrs. H. W. Farnum, at "The Sun Dial" the latter part of the month.

Miss Winifred B. Smith of Lake Forest, Ill., is visiting her grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. McCullough, who are season guests at Hotel Oceanside.

Mrs. M. B. Overall of St. Louis, Mo., returned to Hotel Oceanside after an absence of several seasons. Mrs. Overall's son and grandchildren are spending the season at the William H. Scudder home on Shore road.

Arthur Acton and sons, William and Harold, of London, are the guests of Mrs. Marguerite M. Sheriff at the Lea cottage for the remainder of the season. Mr. Acton is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Sheriff.

EASTERN POINT

MRS. JOHN CLAY gave a bridge tea at her home on Eastern Point Tuesday, the 16th, for the benefit of St. John's church in Gloucester. There was a large attendance of summer visitors. Tables for twenty-five were provided. Playing began at 3.30, tea being served at 4.30. Handsome prizes were awarded, the first prize being won by Mrs. Brumback of East Gloucester and the second by Mrs. John Harrington of Cheyenne, Wyo. Mr. Brumback won the gentleman's prize. About $375 was raised. The guests included: Mrs. Jacob L. Loose, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. B. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Barrett, Mrs. Pollard, Mr. and Mrs. Chandler, Dr. Jarvie, Mesdames Sleeper, Prentice, Tener, Leonard, Bissell, Mr. and Mrs. Brumback, Mrs. Raymond, Miss Leonard, Mr. and Mrs. Greenough, Mrs. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Fitch, Miss Doyle, Mrs. Richards, Miss McGucken, Bishop and Mrs. Reese of Georgia, Mesdames Sheafe, Child, Freyer, Tiffany, Nelson, Foulkes, Singleton, Sharp, Newell, Sortwell, Salmon, Lewis and others.

John Clay has been called to Chicago on business but expects to return and spend October at "Finisterre."

Mrs. Frederick G. Hall of "Stonacre" is among those who served as patronesses at the Russian musical on Wednesday at the home of Miss Edith Notman. Other patronesses included Mrs. Alfred LeManierre, Mrs. C. Russel Hinchman, Mrs. William K. Harcourt, Mrs. Walter L. Palmer, Mrs. William E. Atwood and Mrs. C. D. Hecksher.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Peters of Syracuse, who recently completed a tour of the Orient, have arrived at Hotel Rockaway.

A most enjoyable party composed of the young people at Hotel Rockaway engaged in a ride up the Annisquam river on Thursday evening. A brilliant moon added greatly to the pleasure of the affair.

Dr. Mary Dakin of Magnolia and Boston was the guest at luncheon of Mrs. William B. Hill at Hawthorne Inn on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Parker, who have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Hall at "Stonacre," returned to Brookline the latter part of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Tener are entertaining Miss Katherine Brown of Sewickley, Penn., and William Thaver Brown of New York.

MRS. WATERMAN A. TAFT has as house guests Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Allen of Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Owen, who have the Ezra Taft residence, have as their guests Mrs. Owen's mother, Mrs. George A. Green of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Noel, Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Semmes, Washington and Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Benson of Roland Park, Baltimore.

Mrs. Ovid Butler Jamison is receiving many congratulations on the success of Tarkington night, which was held at Hotel Moorland last Saturday night. Mrs. Jamison, whose home is also in Indiana, is a sister of Booth Tarkington.

Mrs. Walter Carl of Boston, who is spending the summer at Bass Rocks, entertained a large party at the Bass Rocks Golf club a short time ago.

Samuel Spiker of Piqua, Ohio, is a frequent guest at Hotel Moorland dances. Mr. Spiker will enter the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the fall.

DISTINGUISHED BOSTON COMPOSER GUEST AT EAST GLOUCESTER

Percy Lee Atherton, the noted music composer of Boston, who wrote such beautiful music for the "Greek Pageant on the Moors" two years ago, is with us again. He has just come from Lake Placid, where a pageant, set to music by him, was so successfully produced.

He has just completed a group of five more lyrical songs and these will be published this fall in Boston.

Each year, the Hasty Pudding club of Harvard, of which he is a charter member, gives a new play, and he is the author. It was he who sprung into fame suddenly by his first delightful operetta for the club. Since then, his songs have had a still greater demand and are known on every concert stage over the country. Boston music lovers know him through the Boston Symphony orchestra by two compositions, "Noon in the Forest," a symphonic poem, and "Intermezzo—Oriental Serenade." —E. M. M.

MISS WAINWRIGHT'S RECITAL

The recital recently given by Miss Virginia Wainwright at the beautiful residence of Mrs. George Lee at Beverly Farms, was one of the most successful of the season. Miss Wainwright was especially happy in her humorous selections and won approval of her auditors.

ANNISQUAM

MISS OLGA LINGARD has been entertaining as week-end guests at Highland cottage Miss Elizabeth Carter of St. Louis, Mrs. Charles B. Perkins of Brookline, Mr and Mrs. Sidney Biddle of Philadelphia and Stephen Luce of Boston. Mr. Luce is a nephew of Senator Lodge. Miss Lingard has also had as her guest for the past few weeks Mrs. Mary Dillon of St. Louis. Mrs. Dillon is the author of several best sellers, especially famous among which are "The Rose of Old St. Louis," "Miss Livingston's Companion" and "The Farmer of Roaring Run." She is at present engaged in making a synopses of these for the movies.

Since "Reparations," by Miss Olga Lingard, first appeared in The Cape Ann Shore, several requests have come to the author for permission to recite it for the benefit of the disabled soldiers. One reader of note, Mrs. E. H. Wilkins of New York, who won great success as a "four-minute speaker" during Liberty loan campaigns, is planning to read it at a large entertainment at New York this winter.

The costume party Tuesday evening at Wonasquam Lodge was a great success. There were many costumes which showed originality in conception. Dancing was enjoyed and during the evening Mrs. W. A. Draper of Cincinnati gave several very pleasing selections, assisted by Mrs. R. G. Tolmie at the piano. Refreshments were served during the evening.

GORHAM EXHIBIT WINS

Gets the Chief Award at the North Shore Horticultural Show

The chief object of interest at the annual show of the North Shore Horticultural society at Manchester Wednesday were the tables in the center of the main hall given over to the competition in dinner table decorations, attracting the largest number of exhibitors in the history of these affairs.

The first prize, a silver medal, was awarded the Gorham Company of New York for a table of eight covers set with a silver service and a simple decoration of asters.

This exhibit was arranged by Miss Marguerite Walker Jordan, the representative of Gorham & Co., and evoked much admiration, both for the design and craftsmanship of the silverware and the tasteful arrangement of the ensemble.

First prize for a table of four covers went to W. Anagnosti and second prize to Daniel R. McLean. Other competitors in this class were Mrs. C. E. Cotting, Miss Pauline Cross, A. E. Parsons, Mrs. A. Koshland, Mrs. E. B. Cole and Miss Mabel Welch. The Wenham Village Improvement society showed a porch table.

One of the finest exhibits was a group of flowering plants entered by Mrs. W. H. Moors, who won the silver medal. The second prize, a bronze medal, went to Mrs. Lester Leland. A third group was shown by Frank B. Bemis.

The stage was filled with an exhibit of gladioli from the Highlands Gladioli Gardens of Danvers, which won a silver medal.

Mrs. Lester Leland won many prizes in nearly all classes, among them being a first for best specimen of a new plant. She exhibited a new seedling begonia, white erfordia and Frau Helen Harms, shown for the first time. She also took first for two specimens of allmanda, and a first for the best specimen of decorative plant, showing a particularly fine specimen of monkey tree. A very pretty display of aquatics was made by Mrs. W. H. Moore of water lilies and lotus plants, and she was given first prize. Frank B. Bemis was awarded a first for the best three specimens of tuberous begonias, Mrs. Lester Leland taking second.

Mrs. Leland also won a first for 12 dahlias and Miss Pauline Croll won second. The dahlia display was somewhat smaller than in past years but was particularly good. Mrs. George A. Dobyne took a first for 12 named varieties and Mrs. H. S. Grew, first and second for 12 decorative blooms. Miss Pauline Croll was awarded a first for 12 vases of three blooms each. Mrs. H. L. Higginson received a silver medal for best collection of asters.

Frank B. Bemis received first prize for the best single specimen of begonia and Mrs. W. H. Moore won second. A very rare specimen of orchid, the epiphytal, from the Far East, attracted much attention. It was shown by Albert C. Burrage.

The vegetable display has never been excelled, one of the chief prize winners being Mrs. H. L. Higginson, who won awards in numerous classes. Her main exhibit won a silver cup for the largest and best collection. She also won firsts for carrots, artichokes and corn, and seconds for cauliflower, celery and beets. She also took first for the best dozen eggs, Mrs. Lester Leland taking second.

Mrs. George A. Dobyne was awarded first prize for the best quart of milk and a first for best specimen of onion. Mrs. Lester Leland received firsts for corn, eggplant and leeks, Mrs. A .Koshland first for beans and beets, and Mrs. C. E. Cutting firsts for cucumbers and celery. Mrs. Keith Merrill had two firsts for peppers, and first and second for onions.

sires she had starved in her devotion to her professional career, are scarcely unique. But the same is true of human actions in almost any situation in life. It is in their quality that they differ.

The characters are strikingly realistic in conception and the parts are taken convincingly and skillfully, without exception. The situations are always diverting and the lines distinctly clever. One's attention is sustained throughout the play.

Naturally, the acting of Henry Stephenson as Gerald Fitzgerald and Miss Gilda Varesi as Madame Lisa Della Robbia commands the attention that is the due of consummate art in the leading roles. They have created characters that one can never forget.

Mr. Hallman as Ardumede, the Halian chief, and Miss Minnie Milne as Bice, Madame's maid, will also remain in the memory as capital character representations. Gavin Muir, as John Fitzgerald, the son, adapts himself admiringly to this part, while the supporting company leaves very little to be desired.

It is difficult to praise so generously without creating suspicion, but your critic is entirely sincere and can say with conviction that "Enter Madame" is not only well worth a trip to Boston to see, but is a wholesome, clever comedy that will bear seeing more than once.

—Wm. B. Wheelwright.

MY LADY GOES SHOPPING

Last Words

"It does look like Gorham's famous 'bridal room'!" I admitted, as I gazed in admiration upon Phyllis' ever increasing wedding presents.

"That is the most adorable room in New York," remarked Peggy. Aunt Lida always visits it for what she calls exquisite suggestions in wedding presents! Phyllis, who sent the Anna V. Hyatt 'Victory Colt'? His expression is something like your Peter's!"

"What a Peggy-speech!" laughed Phyllis. "A friend of Peter's sent it, and a friend of mine gave me those marvelous book ends of hers—can't you see those life-like goats butting our books in great shape? You see, everyone knows that we adore Anna V. Hyatt's bronzes. That bacchanalian punch bowl came from Gorham's, too—isn't it a gem—and those candlesticks—don't you think candles will burn their brightest held aloft by those joyous children? Speaking of Gorham's, Peggy, you and Phil must stop off and visit their Galleries when you go through New York. New things are being added all the time—you know the Gorham Co. has the finest foundry in America—and, if you are interested in the art of your native sculptors, let 'See Gorham's first' be your motto."

"Ye Gods!" giggled Peggy. "It's easily seen that you have a 'friend in the business'! Is this their handiwork, too?" She tapped a wonderful old Sheffield tray with a discriminating finger.

"No, that's from my friend Schmidt & Son. It is a piece that old Thomas Balsover himself could admire! It is made on the solid copper foundation, used in 1742, which is so different from the electro-plated, nickel-based modern stuff which careless people buy for genuine Sheffield. Schmidt's is the genuine article, as he is a connoisseur and one can always trust his judgment."

"Speaking of 'old silver,' did you see that tea pot and standard at Schmidt's which dates from the time of George III? It has an ivory handle, yellowed with age, and is a beauty."

"Do show Anne the Antique Filet lace cloth that your aunt wrested from James McCutcheon & Co.," said Peggy. "It's the kind to grow green envy in the calmest of matrons!"

There was a ceremonious stateliness in the art of the intricate pattern that made one mentally curtsey to that cream cloth! And Phyllis carelessly continued to exhibit—a point de Milan and Venice that took my breath away by its beauty, followed by Italian luncheon sets, oblong Mosaic sets, Madeira hand embroidered tea cloths, etc., until I had used up all the superlatives in the adjective family!

"All McCutcheon's, except the family linen," explained Phyllis, "and that was monogrammed there. Auntie has a passion for linen showers. Do you know that she hated to leave Magnolia? I saw her off this morning and she was supremely happy in the first pair of good looking orthopaedic shoes that she had ever discovered—those modified plastic oxfords in a light chocolate brown that Thayer McNeil has created to comfort the soles of the poor mortals who want to wear smart and have to wear 'sensible shoes.' Auntie is planning to live in them and order more by mail. She says I'll come to them if I continue to wear these"—Phyllis extended a shapely foot in Thayer McNeil's bronze kid slippers—"but I told her that the new Junior French heels would save me."

"Apropos of sensible shoes," remarked Peggy, "have you seen their adorable patent leather pumps with punched seams and colored underlays? Heavenly hose to match, too."

"Clothes again!" exclaimed Phil, entering, arm in arm with Peter.

"The inseparables!" smiled Phyllis.

"The Invincibles!" sniffed Peggy, scenting their cigars.

"If, as Barrie says, 'One's religion is whatever he is most interested in' ," quizzed Peter, "every shop must be a temple to these three Graces!"

"By the way, I came over to tell you," announced Phil, "that, as I left the house, all the shops of Magnolia seemed to be sending a last offering and Luzette was in tears amid the trunks, because you had not so much as hinted what she was to pack."

"My word! I clean forgot about her!" exclaimed an excited Peggy. "You know those trunks must go out ahead of time! Why do you all sit and smile? Phyllis—no, you are too bridesque for any use—Anne, come back with me and help me to decide things. The awful part of packing is making up one's mind. We must fly!"

We arrived breathlessly, in which state it was hard to calm Luzette, who accepted our apologies with French hauteur and mutely pointed to the expectant, open-mouthed trunks that yawned vacantly before us.

"If 'by their luggage ye shall know them,' any hotel would bend the knee to the royalty of Princess Peggy after receiving such proof as I see present!" I said. "Where did you get that superb suitcase? The fittings are real tortoise, aren't they? Beautiful against that golden brocaded lining! What kind of leather is it?"

"Undressed alligator. Phil got it at Gorham's. He always gives me a good-bye gift to make the break easier when I'm leaving dear old Cape Ann. Oh, dear, that reminds me—I never told Phil to telephone—about storage vaults you know—to the Gloucester National Bank and the Gloucester Safe Deposit and Trust Co."

"Why both?" I asked.

"Well, I just can't choose between them and besides—if the Bolsheviki or something were to blow up one of them I'd still have the things that I'd stored in the other," solemnly reasoned Peggy.

"What if they should blow up both?" I teased.

"They never do," said Peggy with crushing finality, "as they like to string out their crimes—it is a form of advertising."

"Madame," from the injured Luzette, "do I pack?"

"Just a minute," coaxed Peggy, "we have to open these boxes first."

Luzette, mollified, laid their contents before us. From Lamson & Hubbard's there was a gown of brocaded georgette in rust tone—a Ronille model. The lines were beautifully simple, with narrow blue velvet ribbon at girdle and at the edge of the wide sleeves.

There was a dainty square necked voile waist trimmed with Irish crochet, also a serviceable tailleur model in crepe de chine with tiny knife pleates on either side of the closing line.

"For, at this season, one really must have waists," said Peggy. I'll be in Boston for Lamson & Hubbard's fur sale, but I'll envy you, Anne, for you will have all the advantage of the sale plus Miss Farrell here in Magnolia."

"She is my right hand," I admitted. She chose this dress I'm wearing, and Jack says he couldn't have done better himself." (Here, I regret to say, Peggy giggled rudely.) "I never admired cut work until I saw the Copenhagen blue Canton peeping through the piquetine of this delightful garment."

"Miss Farrell has your number" (Peggy can't help it—she gets it from Jimmy), "and that clever manager at the House of Manahan has Phyllis'—everyone has mine! Have you seen the black panne velvet evening gown that Phyllis recently bought at Manahan's? Gold wheat heads and insouciant bachelor buttons in blue and purple are batiked upon it. It is sleeveless, too, and has a girdle of knotted, black lacquered ribbon. It is the quintessence of sophisticated smartness."

"Speaking of Manahan's, Peggy, did you see the dashing black broad tail cloth suit trimmed with a long rolling collar and deep cuffs of Klyonsky fur that Mrs. Leigh captured ere she left Magnolia? It had lovely straight lines and a fascinating metal girdle around the hips. The skirt was a masterpiece."

"Sweaters," responded Peggy, absent mindedly, donning an autumnal brown wool faced with tan silk to match the collor, cuffs, belt and border. "One of Farr's latest—see, it can be worn closed, finishing with a high neck or a Bromley collar effect, or it may be worn as a Tuxedo with a V neck. Isn't it clever?"

"Speak of Farr and you're sure to hear the rustle of Marion's flapping wings!" complained Jimmy, who had knocked and entered simultaneously. "I passed her coming in, Sis, so I'm going to run on down to Gray's. I have decided to treat myself to one of his kodaks ere I embark on my Western trip. Gray is Old Reliable, so it's me for the guy who advertises in my paper. Anything I can do for you down town?"

"YAWNING TIGER"—By Anna Vaughn Hyatt.
From the Gorham Co., New York

"Yes, honey-bub, drop in at the Jeanne d'Arc shop and ask for an antique fan that Miss Haeberle said she'd get for me. Run in to Fred Peabody's Music store and tell him to send all the Caruso records on this list to Phyllis' address. Tell E. A. Flye that we are going and we rely on him to mend Aunt Lida's glasses. Stop in at Wetherell's and get some of that eye wash of his—I never travel without it. And you might see that we have the latest catalogs of Davis' and Gorton's fish—give them my town address"—

"Help!" cried Jimmy.

"I thought you wanted to 'help'," said Peggy, innocently.

Jimmy used Marion's entrance as the cue for his exit, and hurried off murmuring, "Fish—fans, eyewash—glasses, Caruso—catalogs!"

Marion entered in white homespun, crowned by a white felt sport hat that proclaimed Farr, the length of its wide brim, even to the black and grey feather fastened to the edge of the brim. Her red-gold curls, vivid lips and shining eyes supplied the necessary touches of light and color.

"Packing!" she shuddered.

"Mais, non! Mademoiselle," ex ploted Luzeztte. "Nous parlons toujours. Mais packeeng? Jamais de la vie!"

But Marion was, also, "full of words," as her mother had at last consented to purchase the coat of Marion's desires.

"Wait until you see it!" she raved —"deep sapphire blue, and collar and cuffs of krimmer, brilliant touches of silk and wool at the waist line, the new wide armhole, and a straight back running to a voluminous finish! I can wear it for an evening wrap at school. It is a Manahan tour de force."

"I rejoice with you, lamb-pie," congratulated Peggy, "but Luzette seems to think we must pack, so please remove yourself from that box, and feast your eye on this garment—that Hill & Bush fashioned for my delight —before my wardrobe trunk shrouds its beauty."

I didn't mean to delay the packing, but I just had to see that frock at close quarters. It was the usual well-beloved navy blue Canton crepe trimmed with Copenhagen, but withal so "different" that the effect was stimulating! With ribbon in the two shades an effect of embroidery was produced in a startling original manner. The light shade of ribbon was slashed and fastened to a point with a tiny glistening black nail head, the whole forming a leaf pattern which decorated the front of the long waist, and was repeated on the skirt. The girdle sang the two color tones, and the short, wide sleeves were faced with Copenhagen and slashed to show it. It was a veritable creation! But Luzette triumphantly bore it off before I could ask Peggy to slip it on!

"Mother bought an embroidered silk net over black satin at Hill & Bush's this morning," remarked Marion. "It hangs straight from the shoulder and has deep points of French blue chiffon set in the skirt and on the edge of the wide sleeves.

It has a ribbon girdle of black satin. Mother looks about my age in it."

"Good for her!" said Peggy. "Anne, I really think I need more waists."

"There was a lovely voile with filet lace inserts at Hill & Bush's," quoth observing Marion. "The kind that comes to the hips and ties in the back"—

"Pardon!" politely, but firmly, from Luzette. "Which negligee will Madame require placed in zee overnight bag?"

"The new one from Slattery's," ordered Peggy.

"Peggy, what a dream! You must look like a flower in that," exclaimed Marion.

It was orchid georgette—a panel of large meshed lace floated down the front, about this an exquisite lace guimpe ended in flat French silk roses of blue and lavender, and its wing-like sleeves drooped to a point at the hem.

"I hate to leave the Little White Salon," sighed Peggy.

"It is a unique institution," I answered the sigh. "I pine to take the following souvenirs home with me:

"Item 1—the fuschia dress in the window. Haven't you seen it? Sleeveless, of course. The foundation is georgette, the gracefully clinging overdrape is embroidered in darker fuschia chenille. Figure to yourself a pointed hem-line and shining black grapes finishing the self girdle at the side!

"Item 2—A mole skin evening wrap with shawl collar and cuffs of squirrel lined with brown silk"—

"Oh, I know the one you mean. It has a hand embroidered lining—rose colored flowers and great leaves," interrupted Marion.

"That's it," I acknowledged, "and I want"—

"Hair pins and veils in this drawer," broke in Peggy.

But Luzette had her own ideas, and after delicately hinting that, orders once given, our august presences were no longer desired, she curtseyed us out and returned to enjoy the fine art of creaseless packing alone.

We comforted ourselves with tea, while Marion entertained us by cataloguing the virtues of one Harry Vandervelt (who adores her) and contrasting them with the literary vices of poor Jimmy.

"Next year," oracularly foretold Peggy, "you and Jimmy will be keen about each other. Phil and I always Satisfactory Outcome of Week's Racing—Bluebird Wins Marblehead Trophy.

A good southwest breeze and a smooth sea made very satisfactory racing conditions at Annisquam Saturday afternoon. A shortened course was sailed in all but the 15-foot class, the latter sailing the regular triangle, the rest to Plum Cove and return, a run and a beat.

Ex - Commodore Daniel Howard Woodbury brought home the bacon in the 15-foot class. He was just astern of the Tabasco at the leeward mark at Essex and came into the lead on the reach across to the outer mark. On the beat home the boats kept together for six or seven tacks, Wiggin gaining, seeing which the Woodbury boat split tacks and went to the westward, while the rest continued to starboard to Lanesville. Mr. Woodbury guessed right and hit a strengthened slant of wind which set him right up in the front row.

In the birds the Albatross, Canvasback and Tern were the leaders on the run to Plum Cove, with the Tern going into first place on the beat home, until the lighthouse was reached, when the Auk took the lead and retained it to the finsh. The Curlew protested Chickadee for fouling.

Fred Hawkins won a hand from the gallery on the clubhouse piazza when he got the gun at the finish in the cat class. There was very little water between the fleet on the run and on the beat to the lighthouse. At the latter point the Copycat began to get ahead but was challenged in the river by the Catchup and her skipper was smart enough to displace Wesley Pear, one of the cleverest sailors in his class.

In the Fish class Morrill Wiggin in the Tuna coming home, took a strong puff, which capsized the boat which was near the beach at the time. He swam ashore with a young woman who was with him, beached his boat, bailed her out and resumed the race. In this class the Catfish was leading until the Lighthouse was reached, when the Bluebird forged to the front, finishing strong. The summary:

Sunday afternoon's yacht race at Annisquam was sailed in a nice sailing northeast breeze at the start, the course being a beat to Plum Cove, a reach across to the inner mark and a reach home, the wind dying out at the close.

In the bird class the Albatross and Chickadee were the leaders on the windward work to Plum Cove, but a mistake undoubtedly cost them first and second positions.

There was no pennant on the inner mark buoy so the pair headed for the outer mark, while the Auk, Mavis and Tern, which were following in order, steered the compass course for the proper goal and before the leaders were aware of their mistake they had fallen back to sternmost boats. The Auk was leading coming into the river. Jack Hooper came up strong on even terms with Russell Smith and when about a hundred yards from the finsh it looked as if he would nose out first place, but the Auk was nearer the left bank and got a little catspaw of wind which wafted her over the line 16 seconds ahead.

In the Cat class the Catenary and Copycat were in the lead coming out of the river. At the spar buoy the Pear boat carried away a halliard block and the sail came down with a run. During the time damages were being repaired the Catenary got a good lead, which she held almost to the finish line when she ran onto the doldrums and the Copycat, bringing up a stern puff, caught her. Everyone thought it a dead heat, but the judges gave the win to the Copycat by a hairline margin of half a second.

In the Fishes, A. Ames in the Herring and the Bluefish won the honors on the windward work to Plum Cove and the Herring maintained the place to the finish, the Tuna, Morrill Wiggin, working up from seventh boat when entering the river, finishing second. The summary:

ROCKPORT ART EXHIBIT

A fine conception is the work of H. A. Vincent showing the spire of the old church with a nest of picturesque buildings in a beautiful mild atmosphere and splendid color scheme.

The "Herring Fleet," by H. T. Hubbard, is treated in the broad style of this coming master and the "Quarry Dock," by W. Lester Stevens, is the most ambitious and meritorious work shown here by this promising young man.

Marines are not numerous, the large one, "Land's End," by G. T. Margeson, and "Rocks and Surf," by Parker S. Perkins attract much attention.

To our mind there is no artist before the public today who can approach Margeson in his portrayal of the majesty and dignity of the sea. His paintings are epics in color and action and come into being from the innate genius of the man and his life-long intimacy with the sea in its varying moods —the sublimity of storm and the serenity of the ocean on a summer day all make his portrayal as one who paints with the authoritative brush of the master.

C. S. Kaelins' paintings are given much attention, as they are quite new to many in their handling, and to those who appreciate their artistic merit are quite wonderful. Following is the list of exhibitors.

1. Still Life, the Big Battle, H. Smith; 2. The Cellar Shelf, W. R. Davis; 3. The Old Board Walk, Ruth E. Morse; 4. Through the Willows, Mary Nicholena MacCord; 5. The Herring Fleet, A. T. Hibbard; 6. Quarry Dock, W. Lester Stevens.

7. Rocks and Surf, Parker S. Perkins; 8. Hillside Farm, John Wells James; 9. A Spring Day, H. A. Vincent; 10. A Bit of Rockport, Harrison Cady; 11. Winter in Rockport Harbor, C. S. Kaelin; 12. In Month of March, W. B. Parkinson.

13. Still Life, H. F. Levinson; 14. Harbor Hill, Gloucester, Frank A. Kidder; 15. Unloading Fish, E. M. Behar; 16. After Unloading, John M. Buckley; 17. A Bedtime Tune, W. R. Davis; 18. Marsh and Creek, L. R. Cram.

19. The Shack, D. M. Barnes; 20. Pencil Drawings, Lester G. Hornby; 21. Sleeping Puppy, W. R. Davis; 22. Wire Cutters, Argonne, Lester G. Hornby; 23. The Marne Advance at Vaux, L. G. Hornby; 24. Little Balconies, Paris, Lester G. Hornby.

25. Italian Fisherman, Gloucester, H. A. Vincent; 26. Lobstermen, Bearskin Neck, Rockport, L. G. Hornby; 27. Pencil Drawing, Lester G. Hornby; 28. Sleeping Cats, W. R. Davis; 29. Pencil Drawing, Lester G. Hornby; 30. French Type Alexandre, W. Lester Stevens.

31. Drawing, Dorothy Barnes; 32. Drawing, The River, L. G. Cram; 33. Drawing, Schooner Sarah, E. M. Behar; 34. Tarring the Nets, John M. Buckley; 35. Drawing, Dorothy Barnes; 36. Drawing, Landscapes, R. L. Cram.

WATER CARNIVAL

The Cape Ann Community league has attempted to develop the recreational aspects of community work with a good deal of success. One of the last events of the season in this respect will be the Water Carnival, which it is planned to hold at Stage Fort Park on Tuesday, August 30. Games and sports of various kinds will be held and it is hoped that a large number of Gloucester citizens, both young and old, will attend.

One of the chief attractions of the carnival will be the presence in the morning of Commodore Wilbert E. Longfellow to give a demonstration of swimming and life saving. Commodore Longfellow is president of the American Swimming association; also, national field agent of the American Red Cross life saving work. For several years he has given almost his whole time to traveling in the interests of the education of children and grownups as well in all matters pertaining to handling themselves while in the water. This work has carried him all over the country, even to Hawaii. Commodore Longfellow not only demonstrates all the common swimming strokes, but also gives a good deal of attention to teaching rescue work and resuscitation. His method of handling the subject is very fascinating, and wherever he has been, crowds of interested spectators have watched his work.

With the children he has a particularly effective method of removing that fear of the water which is prevalent in the mind of nearly every child, and those who wish their little ones to get started in the right path toward learning to swim would do well to bring their youngsters to the park that morning, that they may have the benefit of Commodore Longfellow's personality and skill.

The Community league is indebted to the Red Cross for Commodore Longfellow's presence at the carnival, for it is under the auspices of the American Red Cross that he is traveling. The fact that his time is completely taken up until the end of September in this outdoor demonstration work shows that the public highly appreciates what he is doing, thus justifying another of the peace-time activities of the Red Cross.

HISTORIC WINSLOW HOUSE

How It Has Been Made Self-Supporting

Those who journey to Plymouth will be amply repaid by a visit to the Historic Winslow House at Marshfield. The road is marked by the Pilgrim Tercentenary markers and at the village green at Marshfield you bear to the left to the railroad station, then to the right over the railroad bridge by the Daniel Webster Estate and Winslow Burying Ground, and just beyond you will find the house. This fine old mansion marks the site of Careswell Estate, the home of Edward Winslow, the Mayflower pilgrim who was governor of Plymouth colony and most prominent in shaping its affairs.

The original house being burned, in 1699, the present house was built by the Hon. Isaac Winslow, son of Governor Josiah Winslow, and for the next four generations through the Revolution had an important part in the social, military and political life of the colony. His son, Gen. John Winslow, was a great soldier of the king, and rose to the rank of major general and was sent to Grand Pre to drive the Acadians from the country.

The next to live in the old house was Dr. Isaac Winslow, who was the last Winslow to live at the old house, and in 1830 Daniel Webster, whose estate adjoined, bought the property. The house finally came into the hands of the Winslow Associates who have restored it to its original condition.

Here one may see the old dining room with its huge fireplace and lintel, and the old drawing room that Gen. John Winslow, on his return from the wars, paneled in the best style.

Then the upper bedrooms with their old period furniture and glimpses of the marsh and sea and the secret closet. The kitchen, with its shelves lined with pewter, its curious fireplace contrivances, the spatter painted beams—all in all a house where the old spirit is still there.

An annex has been built which preserves the integrity of the house. Here one may partake of most excellent food, surrounded by this atmosphere of old-time charm. The house is under the capable management of Anna Johansson, who will serve afternoon tea, luncheons, suppers and dinners. Because the service and food are a bit unusual it is best to telephone the time of your arrival — Marshfield 54-12. The planning of private dinner parties in a special room in the old house is a pleasant feature.

The management has proved successful from a financial point of view. Hence, the Winslow Associates have not only reserved for posterity a very interesting landmark, but given an excellent object lesson of the practical method by which other historic places may be acquired and made self-supporting.

The Historic Winslow House

Marshfield, Mass.

Those who are touring the South Shore to Plymouth will enjoy visiting this fine old Pilgrim house restored just as it was in 1699. Good food in an atmosphere of old-time charm. About ten miles this side of Plymouth—the way is well marked.

fought when we were kids. It's inverse attraction, or something. Just now you are jealous of each other—lest one achieve fame in the Cape Ann Shore. If it weren't for that blessed editor, who is open to ideas and ideals from all the community and lets you do your literary teething on a sympathetic magazine that all the family use as an outlet, you and Jimmy would be a hopeless pair."

Marion was so insulted that, fortifying herself with another cake, she announced her departure, but the arrival of Phil, Jack, Peter, Phyllis and Jimmy, waving the latest edition of the Cape Ann Shore, delayed the victim of free speech.

The advent of fresh tea and refreshing masculinity made Peggy forget her attempts to be a missionary in Flapperland, but the sight of Marion's delightful little profile and bright curls in juxtaposition with Jimmy's brown cheek and "college cut" recalled the incident. She drew the attention of our "young married set"—or was it a sextette—to the "children," who were eagerly consuming their own genius in the Cape Ann Shore.

In the order of their marriage, Jack smiled complacently, Phil proudly and Peter adoringly, at their respective wives.

"It's the magic of old Cape Ann," said Jack.

"It's older magic than that," corrected Phil.

And Peter whimsically quoted Van Dyke:

The way of dreams—the blue bird sang—
Is never hard to find
So soon as you have really left
The grown-up world behind.

"They are just children," he finished.

"We all are," exclaimed Peggy, raising her glass of Mother Ann's fruit punch for a toast—"Here's to eternal youth in the arms of Mother Ann."

—C. Ann Shore.
